Chamberlain in Office as Premier

Mrs. Warfield's Trousseau Is Already Marked 'H. R. H.,' Report.

Special to The Washington Post. (Copyright, 1937.)

London, May 28.—"Honest Stan" Baldwin, king-maker extraordinary, today dealt his final blow to the love idyll of Edward, Duke of Windsor, and Mrs. Wallis Warfield, then stepped out as prime minister of England to raise pigs.

After Baldwin left office a decree by King George VI ended Edward's ambition to have his American-born bride-to-be known as "Her Royal Highness." The King specifically forbade the future duchess to use the royal title after her marriage Thursday. The decree, as well, showed that the duke himself, since his abdication as king last December for "the woman I love," has not enjoyed royal status until today.

As Baldwin, loaded with honors, left office, Neville Chamberlain took his place in a ceremony outwardly as smooth as a liner taking on a pilot in a slumbering sea. But to every informed observer here tonight there are signs and portents on the horizon of the mighty British Empire indicating troubled days are in store for the new, cool and shrewd premier.

Couple Stunned.

Meanwhile, in a centuries-old castle near Monts, in France, the duke and his bride-to-be met the action of the British government with silence, but to everyone it is sure there must be great mental anguish. It is reliably said Mrs. Warfield already had had "H. R. H." and coronets embroidered on articles in her trousseau. Only today a member of the household had referred to the couple as "their Royal Highnesses."

The duke had appeared very happy during the day, singing while he played tennis with Herman L. Rogers, of New York. When the news came from London with the suddenness of a bursting bomb, he went into seclusion after instructing Rogers to say nothing about the decree. But friends of the couple sarcastically referred to the decree as the "government's wedding present."

Events in which the British government took on a new pilot and completed a great shifting in the ministry moved with typical British decorum.

Hoare Home Secretary.

Baldwin went early in the morning to Buckingham Palace and offered his resignation, 14 years after his election to head the Conservative Party. King George accepted, and conferred upon him the highest distinction in the power of the crown, a Knighthood of the Garter, and granted him an earldom.

Shortly after came Chamberlain, his car nearly crossing paths with that of Baldwin at the palace gates. Chamberlain bowed stiffly over the hands of the King, kissing them in the ages-old pledge of fealty, and then stepped away, the new prime minister.

Then the new leader, as "practical as a plumber," went to work to form his cabinet, a cabinet upon which may rest the fate of England, in the opinion of the politically wise.

His government still is a coalition government of 21 members, with 15 Conservatives, 4 Liberal Nationalists and two National Laborites. The tall, sprightly Sir John Simon, a fringe of fluffy white hair about his red head, stepped into Chamberlain's post as chancellor. He had been, under Baldwin, home secretary for the last two years.

Sir Samuel Hoare, first lord of the admiralty, became home secretary. Baldwin's secretary of war, Alfred Duff Cooper, was named to the admiralty. Leslie Hore-Belisha,

A Beauty Is Named . . . . . and . . . . . the Hogs Are Called

GEORGIA GROVE (Miss Maryland)

REPRESENTATIVE BOB MOUTON (La.)

In the spring when the universities select their campus beauty queens, oddly enough perhaps our rural districts break out in an infectious rash of hog calling contests to which not even our legislators are immune. Friday the news cameramen did a perfect job of catching a picture record of the day's developments in the favorite sports of the season: Selection of Miss Maryland on the campus of Maryland University, and rehearsal by Congressman Mouton on the Capitol steps for his forthcoming hog calling contest with Congressman Otha D. Wearin, of Iowa. Miss Grove, 20-year-old sophomore, was chosen by Fredric March, movie star, from among seven finalists in the university campus contest. She attended Hyattsville High School and is a member of Kappa Delta. She lives at 730 Seventh street northeast. The finals in the legislative hog calling contest will be held shortly on the Capitol steps, but the winner will be selected by no movie actor—he'll be selected by a jury of his peers, fellow Congressmen.

Rebels Kill 200, Raze Buildings In Valencia Raid

By the Associated Press.

Valencia, May 28.—Rebel Generalissimo Franco turned his war planes today against Valencia, the Mediterranean seaport to which the government cabinet fled November 7 to escape the siege of Madrid.

A dawn attack by five planes brought death to an estimated 200 persons. Observers said the ships were of Italian manufacture.

The British Embassy announced bombs dropped in the harbor damaged the British freighter Pinzon. The terrific explosions blew men, women and children from their beds. Panic gripped the temporary capital for hours.

When the attack ended, parts of the city—which in peace time is a thriving port with busy silk, tobacco and pottery factories—were in ruins.

Gen. Franco apparently had given up for the moment his drive against Madrid, its broad and once beautiful avenues poc-marked with shell and bomb craters, its buildings shorn of masonry.

Now Franco seeks, apparently, to terrorize Valencia, where the "win the war" cabinet of Premier Juan Negrin directs Spanish government forces. (Capture of Valencia and the "win the war" government

3 Major Teams Bid Against Nats For U. R. Twirler

If Clark Griffith, head of the Nats, signs Newton S. (Bucky) Jacobs, University of Richmond right-hander, who has three no-hit games to his credit this year, he will be bidding over three other major league teams, Jacobs revealed yesterday.

Griffith was so impressed with Bucky in a brief workout yesterday that he made the youthful star an offer to go to work for him at what Jacobs termed a "decent" figure.

Prying words from the drawling Jacobs is difficult, but he did open up enough to say he had "confidence" he would make the grade. "I'm not as big as I'd like to be," he said. "I can't help that. To go with my 160 pounds—he was exaggerating by several pounds there—I have good control, confidence and willingness to work. I want a chance."

Definitely interested in him are the Nationals, Giants, Phillies and Tigers.

Relief Raiders Spurn Rayburn 132-Million Compromise Offer

Bloc Leaders Reply With Demand for $223,000,000 of WPA Funds for PWA, Roads, Flood Control; Another Conference Today.

By Robert C. Albright.

Administration concessions of $132,000,000 for schools and special municipal projects, coupled with repeal of relief restrictions on PWA funds, yesterday were held out to rebellious House earmarking blocs, in swift efforts to compromise a House relief bill impasse.

The offer was rejected by heads of rebellious House factions, who submitted an alternative demand for $223,000,000 of unexpended WPA funds, to be divided: $134,000,000 for PWA; $67,000,000 for roads, and $22,000,000 for flood control.

Conferences with bloc leaders opened in the office of House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, as President Roosevelt warned 530,000 persons must be dropped from relief if the House persists in earmarking one-third of the $1,500,000,000 relief fund for special projects.

Preliminary negotiations for a compromise were held between Rayburn and Representative Alfred F. Beiter, of New York, head of the House PWA bloc. Another confer-

Shortage of Pants Causing Furor in Army Air Circles

The crisis was precipitated by an order by Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff:

"Subject to the availability of trousers, all personnel of the Air Corps will wear trousers and shoes on all occasions for which breeches and boots or leggings are now prescribed in Army regulations."

Hardly had military aviators begun self-congratulations on being allowed to wear more comfortable uniforms when Gen. Craig's phrase, "the availability of trousers," took on a deep-seated significance. For, despite yesterday being National Aviation Day, the Army's fliers haven't any pants. And there won't be any for another month.

The quartermaster depot at Philadelphia is prepared to put on extra shifts and shear through red tape to turn out 33,966 pairs of cotton trousers by July 1. That's the number needed by 16,983 enlisted men in the Air Corps; regulations prescribe a minimum of two pairs per man.

The trousers are identical to those worn by other branches of the service when not in formal drill. But the Air Corps will be allowed to wear the more comfortable uniform at all times. That is, as soon as they can get the pants.

Vancouver Will 'Brand' Babies to Avoid Mixing

Vancouver, May 28 (Canadian Press).—Future Vancouver babies will have their names burned on their backs at birth with the rays of a water-cooled quartz lamp to remove any possibility of infants going to the wrong parents. The "sunburned" names last for six months, and after that time can be brought back by the lamp.

Jury Convicts Tomlinson in Store Holdup

Pratt Also Found Guilty of $785 Robbery of D. C. Tailor.

J. William Tomlinson, local attorney, was found guilty of robbery last night by a jury which had heard him described as the "master mind" in the holdup of Sam Siratonis, a tailor, last August. Siratonis was robbed of $785.

Philip J. Pratt, colored, who along with Charles Henry Bass, also colored, was charged with actual participated in the robbery, allegedly engineered by Tomlinson, also was found guilty. Bass pleaded guilty and testified for the prosecution.

The jury was nearly eight hours in reaching its verdict. It was more than an hour after the verdict was reached that court attaches were able to reach Justice Joseph W. Cox so that the verdict could be returned.

Released in Bond.

The jurors received the case from Justice F. Dickenson Letts shortly after noon. When they failed to reach a verdict early last night, Justice Letts asked Justice Cox to receive the verdict or give them additional instructions if they needed assistance.

Justice Cox permitted Tomlinson to remain at liberty. He set the attorney's bond at $2,000, saying that Justice Letts should decide whether he should be committed to jail pending his appeal. Pratt was committed to jail.

Tomlinson and Pratt were charged with robbing Siratonis, who was known to have a large sum of money on him. Two colored men went into the tailor's shop on the morning of August 18, and after distracting Siratonis' attention beat him into unconsciousness with a blackjack. He then was robbed.

Clemency Promised Denied.

Bass, a surprise witness, testified how he met Tomlinson and Pratt later on and received his share of the loot. His story was denounced by both Pratt and Tomlinson, who denied any connection with the incident.

Testimony was concluded late Thursday night when Justice Letts announced he would sit until the case was closed. After that, James A. O'Shea, John H. Burnett, Alfred Goldstein and Francis J. Kelly, acting for the accused, argued instructions which should be given jurors.

Samuel F. Beach and Charles Murray, assistant United States attorneys in charge of the prosecution, rested the Government case with rebuttal evidence to counteract testimony that Bass' plea of guilty was engineered through a promise he would receive consideration if he did not contest the charge.

Goebbels Charges Immorality In Bitter Attack on Catholics

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, May 28.—Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels charged tonight that a "general decadence of morals" exists in Germany among "Catholic seminaries and in wide circles of the Catholic clergy."

The fiery ruler of Germany's press in a wrathful address against church critics of his government threatened to summon high churchmen to testify under oath if they continued their "slander" of Nazi justice—(criticism of publicity given to German trials and several convictions of churchmen on immorality charges.)

He denied that religion or politics had anything to do with the immorality trials—a new series of which is to begin next month.

He proclaimed that his speech was in answer to the American Cardinal Mundelein's charge that the trials were marked by distorted propaganda and the Cardinal's reference to Reichsfuehrer Hitler as an "Austrian paperhanger."

The cardinal "casts complete doubt on the correctness of these trials," Dr. Goebbels said, "and has the nerve to compare them with atrocity propaganda conducted against Germany during the World War."

Avowing that his answer was against these charges of "distortion of justice and law for egoistic ends,"

Government Set to War on Tax Dodgers

By William V. Nesslv.

A Government drive against wealthy tax evaders, involving both legal action against violators and new legislation to close loopholes, was well under way last night.

President Roosevelt is expected to send to Congress Tuesday a message pointing out what was termed a serious situation revealed by a Treasury investigation, and calling for legislation to stop practices reported to have been disclosed.

Civil and criminal action was contemplated by Treasury officials on the basis of information they have obtained in a widespread study that followed the falling off of March 15 income tax payments well below estimates of the Administration.

Practices said to be aimed at in contemplated legislation include the forming of foreign corporations by individual Americans to lessen tax payments and even the taking out of foreign citizenship for the same purpose.

To Plug Loopholes.

President Roosevelt told his press conference yesterday of the investigation and plans for action. He said very glaring cases of evasion and avoidance had been uncovered and said there was no question legislation will be required at this session to plug obvious loopholes.

Declaring the big question was a moral issue, he charged loopholes were being invented to deprive the Government of tax revenue. He cited the case of a man owning a large yacht whose operation was costing $100,000 a year. Maintaining it was used for personal pleasure, the President said the expectation was the owner would pay for its operation from his own income.

Instead, he said, a loophole was invented, the yacht was incorporated and the owner turned over several million dollars to it. The income from the sum pays the master and crew and other operating expenses, the owner thereby saving some $50,000 a year.

Surface Just Scratched.

The President said this was an actual case and declared there were many more. Though he said it was not for him to disclose the names of those involved, he expressed belief the identities will come to light from the investigation already under way.

Though investigation has just scratched the surface, he added, evasions uncovered will run into millions of dollars. These all are by individuals, it was pointed out, since many of the final corporation returns have not been received yet. Preliminary, estimated returns were filed by many concerns March 15, with requests for extensions of time in which to present complete data.

Mr. Roosevelt yesterday continued conferences with officials over the matter. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Undersecretary Magill emerged from the White House at 5 p. m. after another two-hour discussion of the situation with the President.

Marquis Shrugs And Pays His Fine As Admirers Gape

With a shrug of his shoulders, the Marquis de Veryac yesterday accepted a $10 fine in Traffic Court when arraigned before Judge Edward M. Curran on charges of speeding 40 miles and hour and passing a stop sign.

The French nobleman, who came to Washington for three weeks and has remained a month, was arrested on Reno road northwest several days ago. The courtroom was crowded with young women admirers.

"What have you got to say?" said Judge Curran when the marquis pleaded guilty.

The marquis shrugged.

"Didn't you see that stop sign?"

Again the marquis shrugged.

"Do you think you will see it next time?"

Another shrug.

C.I.O. Aims New Drive At 350,000 in Utilities; 15 Hurt in Steel Riot

Union Head Asks U. S. Intervention

Murray Charges Unfair Labor Practices By Firms.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 28.—A force of club-swinging policemen repulsed a long file of marching demonstrators tonight in a hand-to-hand fight near the South Chicago plant of the Republic Steel Corporation.

At union headquarters it was estimated 15 marchers were injured in the melee. Among them was a woman whose name was given as Mrs. Lucille Cook, 27. She was bruised about the head.

It was the third successive night on which the patrolmen turned back groups that gathered near the mill—still operating despite the walkout called by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Six Shots Fired.

The marchers, estimated at about 1,000, formed ranks near the union's field headquarters a quarter of a mile away. Behind a standard-bearer carrying an American flag, they trudged toward the mill. They brushed past eight policemen at an intersection, but approximately 30 officers in squad cars and on foot formed a barrier across the street two blocks from the Republic works.

The parade proceeded to the blockade of men and machines. The fight ensued. Policemen flailed clubs. The flagpole was broken. Holding bruised heads, the demonstrators retired.

The affray—first of major proportions since the walkout was ordered—followed a move by the strikers to strengthen their siege of the Republic works.

A number of unionists left a simultaneous mass meeting in Indiana Harbor, Ind., with the avowed intention of lending "moral support to the efforts to shut the Republic mill" in South Chicago.

Approximately 80 policemen were on duty on or near the Republic grounds.

Mail Trucks Stopped.

Cleveland, May 28 (U.P.).—Two United States mail trucks carrying supplies for non-striking workers were turned back by pickets and shots were fired in two other clashes on the steel strike front today.

The mail trucks were stopped by pickets at Republic Steel Corporation's plant at Warren, Ohio. The trucks carried bread that had been mailed via parcel post from Cleveland and towels that had been mailed locally. The supplies were destined for men who have remained in the plant.

U. S. Inquiry Sought.

Youngstown, Ohio, May 28.—Calls for Federal intervention echoed above the orders of pickets today as the Steel Workers Organizing Committee took a firmer foothold at the gates of three independent steel companies and sent in word to sign contracts or stay closed.

At scattered points—Chicago, Buffalo, Canton, Ohio, and Monroe, Mich.—Republic Steel Corporation workers stood by their steelmaking, but more than 70,000 workers were idle along the southern rim of Lake Michigan and Lake Erie.

Philip Murray, S. W. O. C. chairman, came to Youngstown today, looked down the broad Mahoning Valley—free of the smoke and soot of steel furnaces for the first time in months—and petitioned Attorney General Cummings for an investigation of what he called "unfair labor practices" by Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. and Republic. The third firm involved in the strike is Inland Steel Co.

Only a few hours before two S. W. O. C. members charged they had been fired upon by a Sheet & Tube policeman.

On the Labor Front.

The American Federation of Labor's executive committee at Cincinnati decided to seek amendment to the Roosevelt wage and hour bill.

John L. Lewis yesterday announced start of a drive to bring the Nation's 350,000 utilities workers into the C. I. O.

Seventy thousand steel workers in five States remained on strike as union leaders announced they would not compromise their position.

In Detroit the United Automobile Workers called a "strategy session" to plan renewal of distribution of union literature at the gates of the Ford Co.

Four hundred and fifty striking miners tonight evacuated Superior Coal Co. No. 4, Wilsonville, Ill., where they have staged a sit-down since last Thursday night. The strike, however, is not over, according to John Fischer, president of the sit-downers.

A. F. L. to Seek Wage Bill Based On Bargaining

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, May 28.—The American Federation of Labor's executive council decided tonight to seek amendment of the Administration wage and hour bill to fix minimum wages and maximum hours for men by collective-bargaining standards.

Opposing the measure in its present form, the council directed William Green, A. F. of L. president, to prepare an amendment that would make the wage and hour standards fixed by any collective bargaining in each industry the standard for the whole industry.

The council's action on the wage and hour bill followed admission of the Progressive Miners of America, rival to John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers in Illinois, to membership in the Federation.

Green emphasized, however, that the Progressives were "not leaving Illinois for the time being."

By Russell Smith.

Federal agents yesterday were ordered to investigate "whether officials of the Bibb Manufacturing Co., of Porterdale, Ga., and other persons, have conspired to deprive textile workers from exercising rights of organization and collective bargaining guaranteed under the national labor relations act."

With this action Attorney General Homer S. Cummings served public notice the teeth omitted by Congress from the labor relations act will be supplied by another section of the United States Code.

This is section 51, title 18, which Assistant Attorney General Brien McMahon said last night makes a crime of any conspiracy to deprive a citizen of his rights under any law of the United States.

"The investigation," said the Justice Department announcement of the Georgia investigation, "is predicated on the complaint of Sidney Hilman, chairman of the Textile Workers' organizing committee."

"The object of the complaint is to ascertain whether various persons complained of have conspired

President Signs Measure Killing District Red Rider

The Little Red Rider yesterday went the way of Little Red Riding Hood, i. e., into history and fable, as President Roosevelt signed the repeal bill passed by Congress.

With the law now in effect, public school teachers will be at liberty to discuss the Soviet Republic and communism for the first time in two years.

The act carries a proviso that it shall not be interpreted as "permitting the advocacy of communism," but this will not affect the discussion of the subject in the classrooms.

Tour Covers Cities In East and South

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 28.—Marching on into a new branch of the Nation's industry, the C. I. O. through its United Electric and Radio Workers Union tonight announced a drive to complete organization of the 350,000 workers in the public utilities field.

A squad of union officials will leave Monday for a tour of the East and South covering all the cities, with the extensive network of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation in Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Louisana as their first objective.

At the same time, it was announced, organizers from the West would start out over the rest of the country working south from Cleveland, Ohio, meeting with the Eastern group in Kansas City in about two weeks to co-ordinate their campaigns.

100,000 in C. I. O. Unions.

Of the nation's 350,000 workers in the gas, electricty and steam power industries, the union said, about 100,000 are now members of other C. I. O. unions, and of the 80,000 Electrical and Radio Workers Union members, about 15,000 are from the utility field.

Plans for the drive were completed at a conference between President James B. Carey, of the union, Director Albert Stonkus, of its utility division, and Chairman John L. Lewis, of the C. I. O., who had just completed negotiations involving 14,000 subway employes here.

The union, Stonkus said, now has about 48 organizing bases. Among the key cities in the Southern drive will be Atlanta, New Orleans, Birmingham, Louisville and Pensacola, Fla., which will be the main headquarters.

The plans included assignment of 20 C. I. O. organizers to the union for the campaign.

Corporation "Cracked."

"We've already 'cracked' the Commonwealth & Southern through negotiations carried on by the United Auto Workers at Saginaw, Mich.," Stonkus said.

Lewis issued the following statement in connection with the announcement:

"The drive to organize the power workers of the United States is now in full progress. The Committee for Industrial Organization will give full support to the United Electrical and Radio Workers of America and the program to provide the benefits of industrial unionization will be prosecuted with speed and intensity.

"The goal will be to provide written agreements covering wages, hours and all other conditions of work for everyone employed by the public utilities.

"These agreements will be the result of collective bargaining by the employes with their respective employers, in accordance with the law of the land and the new spirit of peaceful negotiation between the workers and the companies they serve. We anticipate the early signing of such agreements."

Demon Rum Raises His Head on House Floor As U. S. Virgin Islands Distillery Is Assailed

By Sidney Olson.

The specter of the Demon Rum has lifted its (ugly—lovely: take one) head on the floor of the House of Representatives, and more than one member is shifting from foot to foot and back to foot again in pleasant anticipation of what is to come.

Rep. Louis Ludlow (Democrat), of Indiana, has sponsored a resolution calling for a very searching investigation of all aspects of the manufacture of Government House Rum in the Virgin Islands.

Ludlow, unlike the customers who have been surging in and out of liquor stores to bear away armfuls of the fiery beverage, is saddened by the thought that the United States Government is in the liquor business and doing fine.

It is a loathsome thought to Ludlow that "the Government distillery in the Virgin Islands, financed by the dollars of American taxpayers, has been working steadily, producing 90 per cent proof rum."

He recalls with some indignation "the statement of one connoisseur who described Government rum as a beverage of such authority that 'one drink of it would make a rabbit spit in a bulldog's face.'"

The big question, however, with some of the members of the House is whether or not such an investigation will involve a complete physical analysis of Government House Rum. Several members believe the rum, in order to be properly understood, should be rolled on the tongue, as a taste test; drunk moderately, as a digestive test; and possibly consumed in larger quantities, as a hangover test.

Ludlow's assault is concentrated on the issue of whether the Government should make such "an indefensible foray into the realm of business." Others, their tongues moving wistfully, seem more interested in a really intimate study of the nut-brown liquid.

Ludlow, in discussing "this strange and ill-starred enterprise," said he did not wish to asperse the Government officials (meaning Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes and other Interior Department heads) who sponsored the business. He said: "They have found the

'AAA of 1937' Will Fail, Says Farm Official

By the Associated Press.

A high official of the American Farm Bureau Federation predicted yesterday its efforts to rewrite and broaden the old AAA for the purpose of controlling prices and production would fail at this session of Congress.

Chester Gray, legislative representative, said Chairman Jones (Democrat) Texas, of the House Agriculture Committee, is neither friendly nor unfriendly toward the proposed "Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1937."

"And obviously," he added, "if it is not sponsored by the chairman the bill cannot pass.

"Too, we have found opposition from the other major farm groups who believe the bill to be unconstitutional in view of the fact that it proposes to control crop production, which was declared to be a matter of State control in the Supreme Court's decision outlawing the processing taxes of the old Triple-A."

Wallace, Jones Clash.

Secretary Wallace, supporting the bill, clashed with Jones yesterday on the question of how much the proposed farm price stabilization efforts would cost. Their exchange occurred at a House committee hearing on the measure.

Jones, questioning ability of the Treasury to finance the program which Wallace urged, told the Secretary he estimated $635,000,000 to $1,250,000,000 would be needed annually for "parity" and soil conservation payments if all farmers complied.

"I think, Mr. Chairman, that your mathematics must be in error," Wallace retorted.

To Stand by Figures.

Asserting he based his estimates on production figures for the last 10 years and parity prices as determined by the Department of Agriculture, Jones said he would stand by them until shown they were incorrect.

The chairman's estimates were considerably higher than those of the Farm Bureau Federation, which reported the program would cost an annual average of about $300,000,000.

Reporters eager to know the President's attitude toward the bill heard him assert at a press conference he hoped Congress would pass additional farm legislation embracing the "ever-normal granary" suggestions of Wallace.

Baker Improving Aboard His Yacht

Aboard Cutter Taney in Mid-Pacific, May 28 (AP).—Peritonitis-stricken George F. Baker, jr., multimillionaire New York banker, rallied today aboard his Honolulu-bound yacht after Navy, Coast Guard and Public Health Service workers raced to his aid by air and sea.

His 200-foot yacht, the Viking, more than 200 miles out in the Pacific, pressed on toward the island capital with all possible speed and expected to reach port at 4 p. m. (7 p. m., Eastern standard time) tomorrow.

Mrs. Maude F. Gibbs Gets Divorce Decree

Mrs. Maude F. Gibbs, 4900 Sixteenth street northwest, yesterday in District Court was awarded an absolute divorce from Malcolm G. Gibbs, 3133 Sixteenth street northwest, on the grounds of a desertion for a period of more than 5 years.

Mrs. Gibbs asserted the couple was married in 1904 and had one son, Henry F. Gibbs. She said she had been amply provided for financially and had effected a suitable property settlement with her husband, and thus sought no alimony. Attorney George F. Williams represented Mrs. Gibbs.

Downtown Parking Ban Is Proposed by Schulte

Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, said yesterday he will recommend to the House District Committee that legislation be enacted prohibiting all parking in the downtown section.

Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of Commissioners, made a similar suggestion at a tax hearing on Wednesday. Authority to control parking lies in the hands of the District heads.

N.Y. Barbers End Strike, Hairdressers Call One

New York, May 28 (AP).—Just as New York's 6,000 striking barbers reached agreements with their employers today, the Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Union called a general strike of 7,500 operators in 3,000 beauty shops for Wednesday.

The cosmetologists are demanding a 48-hour week and minimum wages.

Hopkins' Pay Cut Sweet Revenge for House; Indicates Congress Still Has a Little Spunk.

By Franklyn Waltman

NOTHING that has happened around here in a long time has given us so much pleasure as the action of the House in cutting $2,000 from the salary of Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins—but not because we think his present annual honorarium of $12,000 is too much. For a position carrying with it the responsibilities of relief administrator $12,000 is little enough.

WALTMAN.

But it was a pleasant sight to see someone slap the smartalecky Harry Hopkins down, even though the cut is returned to him later on. For several years now Harry Hopkins has acted as if he knew the last word about the best way of relieving distress, and he has been intolerant of any other viewpoint. Enjoying the full confidence of the President, he has treated members of Congress as though they were political puppets to do what he tells them.

And now the House is getting sweet revenge. This shoving around of Mr. Hopkins and the House revolt on the relief appropriation bill furthermore is a very healthy sign. It indicates that there still is some spunk left in Congress, and unless the White House, by turning on the heat, succeeds in frightening the House rebels, it should be the beginning of the end of the disgraceful business of handing blank checks to the President—which is to say, in the case of relief, to Mr. Hopkins.

The trouble with Congress, however, is that whenever it starts out to do the right thing, to do its constitutional duty, it does it in the wrong way. In this controversy over whether $505,000,000 of the $1,500,000,000 relief fund should be ear-marked for substantial public works, the weight of the evidence seems to be on the side of Messrs. Roosevelt and Hopkins.

In the first place, the revolting bloc in the House obviously is actuated by a desire to get close to the political pie counter and, by log-rolling and pork-barrel methods, get as much pap for their districts as is possible. As politicians, these House members have become tired of Messrs. Roosevelt and Hopkins getting all the credit for bestowal of the beneficence made possible by their votes.

This is a natural reaction for politicians—and if these House members were not politicians they would not be where they are today. But the time has long passed when pork-barrel methods should be tolerated. Yet Mr. Roosevelt cannot escape responsibility for a revival of the old custom. His demand for lump-sum appropriations, to be spent as he and Harry Hopkins think advisable encourages pork-barrel tactics and is almost as bad. It is not a sound principle of representative government and in the long run it is not economical.

The action of the House revolters is not objectionable because they are ear-marking parts of the appropriation. They should do that. But they are ear-marking the funds for the wrong things. The ear-marking of $505,000,000 for the construction of buildings, roads and other substantial public works is objectionable not only because it constitutes pork-barrel and log-rolling raids on the Treasury, but because at this time it is very bad economics.

* * *

The President some weeks ago clearly made the point when he announced that the Federal Government proposed to curtail heavy public works because of the rapidly rising price levels of material for such projects. Thus, by continuing public works programs, the Federal Government would become a competitor for supplies against private initiative and would contribute to further increases in price—with a subsequent discouragement to private initiative.

An illustration can be found in the field of housing. There the rapid rise which already has occurred in prices of building materials threatens to slow down the acceleration, if not actually to impede, the splendid progress made in residential building in recent months.

The index of wholesale prices of building materials as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics hsa risen from 89.5 in December to 95.9 for March. Meanwhile, so stimulated has the building industry become that wage rates also are rising. Common labor as of March 1 was being paid at the rate of 110 per cent of the 1926 average, and skilled labor rates at 98 per cent of that average.

Entry of the Federal Government into the markets for building material and skilled labor may well have the effect of raising prices or wages still higher, or at least pegging them at the present levels, which are held to be too high in some sections of the country to tempt those of an economical turn of mind.

Moreover, the majority of those on relief rolls, unfortunately, are not skilled workers. There would be no place for them in a large public works program. The result would be that Government projects would make it harder for private entrepreneurs to get the labor they need, while the Government's relief problem would not be greatly solved.

As the President asserted at his press conference, the pending legislation is a relief bill and as such must be distinguished from an employment bill. The time has passed for pump priming projects to stimulate employment. Of course, that being so, it seems somewhat ridiculous to continue along with the made-work and boondoggling projects a la Hopkins. That is the weakness of Mr. Hopkins' case.

But we had better stop. Whenever one commences to say anything that sounds like advocacy of a straight-out relief dole, Mr. Hopkins, simulating holy horror, wants to know whether it is desirable to demoralize men and women by giving them relief without work. That, however, is plain bunkum. It is not the lack of work that demoralizes men. It is the lack of income.

In Sunday's Washington Post Franklyn Waltman reviews the term of the Supreme Court which ends on Tuesday and seeks to appraise its place in history.

3 Killed, 4 Injured In Dynamite Blast At Lincoln Tunnel

Weehawken, N. J., May 28 (AP).—Three men were killed and four injured today by a dynamite explosion while at work constructing the second bore of the Lincoln Tunnel.

The blast occurred 40 feet below the surface of the ground. The men were drilling rock preparatory to tunneling under the Hudson River. With the first bore, recently completed, each section of the tunnel was to provide one-way auto traffic under the river between north Jersey and midtown New York.

Fellow workmen said the group of seven men caught the full force of the explosion when a pressure drill struck a stick of dynamite.

Salvatore Ratti, 55, Jersey City.

Joseph Lacey, 34, New York.

U. S. Attorneys, Norris Support Utility Loans

By the Associated Press.

The Government and Senator Norris, of Nebraska, an ardent advocate of public power development, struck simultaneous blows yesterday at injunctions against Federal loans and grants for municipal powe. systems.

Government attorneys asserted to the Supreme Court the loans and grants are Constitutional because they give employment to the jobless and thus promote the Nation's general welfare.

They asked the tribunal to refuse to review an appeal by two utility companies from a decision by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, refusing to enjoin the Government from financing municipal projects in Alabama and Iowa.

The court is generally expected to announce Tuesday whether the appeal is to be granted.

Norris declared on the Senate floor that unless the justices deny the utilities' appeal "weary waiting" will go on until its next session in October.

Charging private power firms have tied up more than 50 projects for more than three years, the Nebraskan said some way must be found to prevent them from delaying PWA financing of such enterprises.

Intimates of Norris reported earlier in the day he soon would propose legislation to restrict the injunctions.

Off the floor, he confirmed that details of his forthcoming bill to establish seven regional bodies like the Tennessee Valley Authority would "deal with the injunction problem."

If the court agrees Tuesday to pass on the dispute, a final decision cannot be obtained until fall, if it refuses, the decision of the court of appeals would remain in effect.

Secretary Ickes said yesterday the outcome of the litigation would affect 54 public power projects held up by litigation.

Traffic Officer To Get Speeder After 3 Years

On October 16, 1934, Randall arrested George W. Brent, 1700 block of Minnesota avenue southeast, on a speeding count. Brent, it was alleged, failed to appear in court. Randall obtained a warrant.

Then followed a two years' search for the accused motorist. He couldn't be found. Yesterday, however, Randall learned the man he wanted was to appear in court on another charge.

So, when Brent is arraigned today, he will face the 1934 speeding charge as well.

53 Bodies Found After Avalanche

El Oro, Mexico, May 28 (AP).—Fifty-three bodies had been recovered tonight from the mud and sand of an avalanche that engulfed parts of the mining town of Tlalpujahua, about 15 miles from here.

Rescue workers believed they would find many other bodies in the debris, which in some places below the town reached a depth of 50 or 60 feet. Hundreds of men were digging into it.

The slow moving mass flowed down the mountainsides yesterday and over and beyond Tlalpujahua when a dam, holding back years of "tailings" from the Dos Estrellas gold mine, gave way after three days of heavy rains.

Toiling Mother Accused Of Chaining Son to Tree

East Liverpool, Ohio, May 28 (AP).—Mrs. Pearl Pugh, 44, Chester, W. Va., pottery worker, was jailed today for grand jury investigation of charges she went to work leaving her son, Daniel, 13, chained to a tree.

Chief Floyd Lyons said the youth fought authorities when released, asserting his mother, a widow, would beat him if he got away.

Lawyers Held Obstructionists In Jackson Talk

Tells Bar Group Profession Thwarts Democratic Government.

By the Associated Press.

Sea Island, Ga., May 28.—Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, mentioned as a possible Supreme Court appointee, charged today that the legal profession has become "a cult of obstruction."

In a speech before the fifty-fourth convention of the Georgia Bar Association, Jackson said "no realist believes that any public policy touching big business can be entrusted to the legal profession to enforce."

He declared that "no group in the United States is louder in its demands for democratic government than the bar. * * * At the same time, no group in the United States has so consistently thwarted the efforts of the democratic government to establish and enforce a policy concededly within its constitutional power."

Follow Court Cue.

"Taking the law as now established to be sound, we are forced to admit that the early struggle against monopoly was paralyzed by the court, and that its decision was not even good law." Jackson was referring to the Supreme Court.

Speaking of various antitrust cases coming before the Supreme Court, and its rulings, Jackson said:

"No one better knows than the lawyers how quickly lower courts and judges, and the lawyers themselves, catch the cue from the Supreme Court and govern themselves according to the philosophy it announces. The cue to whittle down the antitrust acts and reduce them to impotency given by the Supreme Court in these cases was caught by district courts throughout the land, and the offense of attempting to restrain trade came to be treated as frivolously as the offense of parking overtime."

Says Laxity Brought NRA.

Of recent legislation he said "the fact that is frequently overlooked is that NRA never would have been attempted, nor would any necessity for it have become apparent if the milder and more moderate remedies against business abuses had been allowed by the courts to function."

He said two things were necessary to a national antitrust policy. "First, a national policy in which all governmental controls are dedicated to stopping monopoly instead of part trying to suppress and part trying to foster monopoly, as the situation has been for years past."

The other essential, he said, is "a judiciary that will not sabotage that policy, which it has done in the past and is doing today."

Truce Giving CCC 3-Year Life Made in House-Senate Parley

Permanency Demand of Administration, Short-Term Bill of Lower Chamber Compromised; Civil Service Item Separated.

By the Associated Press.

A "compromise" giving the CCC a three-year lease of life appeared yesterday to have settled an acrimonious dispute in Congress.

President Roosevelt had asked that the Civilian Conservation Corps, one of his favorite agencies, be made permanent. The Senate agreed, but the House objected.

Contending that Congress should keep a check on depression-born agencies, House members voted a two-year extension. Yesterday a conference committee representing both chambers agreed on the compromise, which now must be ratified by the Senate and House.

Three more years of life for the agency which has given jobs and citizenship training to nearly 2,000,000 youths since 1933 would extend it to June 30, 1940, near the end of Mr. Roosevelt's second term.

Under the compromise, a Senate amendment providing civil service status for administrative employes will be taken to the House for a separate vote.

In line with a Senate amendment, the legislation was altered to provide that enrollees should be selected from "youthful citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in need of employment." The Senate had objected to a provision they must be "needy."

A reduction in Director Robert Fechner's salary from $12,000 to $10,000, voted by both branches, was not in dispute. Both branches also have voted to limit enrollment to 315,000.

Board Studies Gross Receipts Levy of ½%

No Decision Reached So Far on Rate of Proposed Income Tax.

By James D. Secrest.

A tax rate of one-half of 1 per cent on gross receipts was being considered in connection with the business privilege tax by the District Commissioners' special tax committee as it worked far into the night drafting the program ordered by the Kennedy sub-committee of the House District Committee.

This rate was suggested by the decision earlier in the day to raise $3,000,000 from the business privilege levy and $2,000,000 from an income tax.

Elwood H. Seal, acting chairman of the committee, stated that no decision has been reached relative to the rates of the income tax, but it is expected to be well under the Federal scale in view of previous esimates that a duplicate of the Federal levy would raise an aggregate of $5,000,000.

Motor-minded members of the House sub-committee gained an easy victory when the Commissioners decided to change the motor vehicle weight tax bill so that the $1,500,000 revenue will go into the gas tax fund rather than into general revenue.

No Action Taken.

Such a course had been urged upon the sub-committe by Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, but no action had been taken by the sub-committee.

The District heads decided to adopt the plan because of the rejection of the 1-cent gas tax increase and the limitation of new revenue to $6,149,000.

Without the motor vehicle weight tax, the four new taxes will raise $6,000,000. Besides the $5,000,000 to be obtained from the business privilege and income levies, the inheritance tax is expected to produce $800,000 and the jump in the insurance tax $200,000.

The Commissioners will raise the lacking $149,000 and more from a rise in license fees and a strengthening of the intangible personal property tax, which they decided to retain despite the income tax.

Urges Teeth in Tax.

Fred H. Allen, tax assessor, told the House sub-committee that an additional $1,000,000 might be raised by "putting teeth" into the intangible personal property law, but other District officials believe his estimate is overly optimistic.

Originally, the Commissioners proposed that persons who pay the intangible tax should be given credit on their income tax, but yesterday they rejected this plan on the ground that the income levy will be much lower than formerly drawn.

The committee also has to draw up bills providing for the licensing of foreign corporations doing business in Washington, authority for the establishment of parking meters, and a revision of the intangible tax law.

The Commissioners also hope to salvage a portion of the gas tax bill dealing with the bonding of gas importers.

Zep Inquiry Ends; Sabotage Revived

New York, May 28 (AP).—With page after page of clews and an open mind to all theories, the U. S. Department of Commerce board seeking an explanation to the mysterious flash of fire that devastated the Hindenburg concluded its hearing today and prepared to assemble its report.

The theory that the Hindenburg was wrecked deliberately was revived.

The investigators received their first tangible information on the possibility of sabotage from Maj. Hans Huge Witt of the German Air Corps. May Witt's revival of the theory of sabotage was based partially on hearsay.

"I heard from my brother in Frankfort on the day before the sailing (May 3)," he said, "that the Zeppelin Co. was warned by letter or telephone that sabotage must be watched for. For that reason, extra care was taken by the company in the examination of all passengers' baggage. My baggage was not examined because I had an official pass."

Tax Evaders, Avoiders Aren't the Same Thing

By the Associated Press.

Government revenue experts said yesterday there is a difference between a tax avoider and a tax evader.

They said evasion means the use of illegal means to escape taxes through violations of tax laws or regulations.

Tax avoidance, on the other hand, means the use of some device to get around the tax laws, for which it is difficult or impossible to impose punishment.

Yank at Night Club Doorman's Mustachio Involves Mrs. St. Johns, Husband in Melee

Adela Rogers St. Johns, the writer; Daniel Higgins (left), and her husband, Patrick O'Toole, after a night club battle in which Miss St. Johns and six men were arrested. Said Miss St. Johns: "It seems simply incredible." Her trial on simple assault charges was set for June 9.

(By the Associated Press)

New York, May 28.—Everybody agreed it was a grand fight, but who started it?

Adela Rogers St. Johns and her husband, Francis Patrick O'Toole, said the night club people threw the first punch.

The night club people said they did nothing of the sort. Someone in the O'Toole party pulled the doorman's handle-bar mustachios, they said and the first thing they knew the air was full of fists.

By the time the police arrived in front of Bill's Gay Nineties last night, one of the men in the O'Toole party was stretched out on the sidewalk and the two others were weaving on their feet. Mrs. Rogers, author and former newspaper woman, was screaming and ducking.

Jack Dempsey taught her to duck, she said, and when she appeared in court this morning she was a credit to her teacher. She was completely unmarked.

"It was incredible, simply incredible," she said. "I m Irish, and did you ever hear of a more fighting Irish name than Francis Patrick O'Toole? If we had gone there looking for trouble would we be here? Would poor Bill Wright, the sweetest person on earth, be lying in the hospital, and would my darling husband have four stitches on his face and poor Don Higgins have a sore jaw and a black eye?"

Wright, 49, a radio commentator, was in Bellevue Hospital with a fractured skull, a circumstance which led Magistrate Anna M. Kross to postpone until June 9 a hearing on a round of charges and countercharges of simple assault.

Mrs. St. Johns, who gave her age as 42 and whose husband is a publicity man, said she suggested going to the Gay Nineties after dinner because "they play San Francisco songs there" and she was homesick for San Francisco.

Goebbels Hurls Morals Charge At Catholicism

Challenges Church Again to Doubt Correctness of Nazi Justice.

he declared the clergy had failed to interfere to halt alleged improper practices and cited the blood purge of 1934 as evidence the Nazis do their housecleaning.—(Some of the executions of 1934 were announced as intended to stamp out improper sexual practices among a few followers of the Nazi regime.)

"If you ask why trials of similar offenders in other walks of life are not public, I reply—because no other calling or profession hitherto has presumed to condone such swinish conduct, and because in no other calling was immorality so rampant as among those under discussion," he told an audience of 20,000.

(Catholic attorneys have said most of the so-called immorality cases had been punished by the church, and that the Nazis unfairly sought to indict the whole clergy for the acts of a few wrongdoers.)

Goebbels criticized Catholics abroad because he said they had not "condemned" the asserted practices, and related in detail a number of specific cases which he said were examples of ecclesiastical immorality.

Charging the German clergy with misinforming the foreign public, by seeking to establish that such cases were few in number, he cried:

"The situation in Germany is not a case of individual acts, but of a general decadence of morals more shocking than anything that can be observed in the entire history of humanity.

"What is printed in the (Nazi-controlled) papers is only infinitesimal as compared to the hair-raising demoralization of morals that actually has occurred."

Questioning of the truthfulness of the trials—"one single time more," he warned, would result in "drastic means" to dispel doubts—including the summoning of churchmen to testify.

Dr. Goebbels mentioned Cardinal Mundelein by name only once, although he had drafted his speech with the announced intention to answer the American cleric's charges.

The Chicago Cardinal last week criticized Germany's attitude toward the church and publicity given the recent trials of Catholic monks and lay brothers, a number of whom were convicted of immoral practices.

Presbyterian Parley Censures Action on 'Liberal' Applicant

Assembly Rules Duluth Leaders Should Have Relinquished Jurisdiction Over Man Refused License as Minister.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, May 28.—Sitting as a "court of Jesus Christ," the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. ruled late today that the Presbytery of Duluth acted unjustly in refusing to release an applicant for the ministry after denying him a license.

The assembly, affirming a finding of its permanent judicial commission, upheld the Synod of Minnesota, which ordered the presbytery to release William Van Dyken from its jurisdiction.

Although the Duluth Presbytery refused to license him because it considered him "too liberal" theeologically, church officials said, the judicial commission found it was only an administrative issue and did not go into the question of theology.

"Simple justice," the commission asserted, should have demanded Van Dyken's release.

The finding did not end the controversy. The Duluth Presbytery has submitted two overtures, or resolutions, asking the General Assembly to determine if it was "fully within its rights" in refusing to license Van Dyken or to release him, and requesting further that the assembly withhold approval of minutes of the South Dakota Synod approving Van Dyken's licensing.

The assembly earlier heard its committee on legal procedure report that the church had recovered approximately $1,600,000 worth of property which former members took with them when they formed the Presbyterian Church of America a year ago.

Mrs. Johnson Shows Borneo Pictures Here

Explorer's Widow Speaks for Benefit of Child Welfare League.

Osa Johnson, explorer widow of Martin Johnson, showed to Washington yesterday for the first time motion pictures they took together in Borneo. The exhibition, at which Mrs. Johnson spoke, was for the benefit of the Washington committee of the Child Welfare League of America, and was shown in Constitution Hall.

Mrs. Johnson, tiny brunette, told of expeditions into the trackless inland forests of Borneo. She told of the unending rainfall, which sometimes reaches as much as 9 inches a day, and the effects it had on the expedition, which finally was forced to make its headquarters in a houseboat. She described the insects which thrive in the dank jungle, eating everything perishable, even teakwood.

So hot and humid was the air, refrigeration was needed to preserve her motion picture film, which was kept in chilled thermos bottles and flown to Europe.

Coast Guard to Build $1,000,000 Aerial Base

By the Associated Press.

Representative Lindsay C. Warren, of Washington, N. C., announced last night that the Coast Guard has informed him a $1,000,000 air base will be established at Elizabeth City, N. C.

Warren said the air base was authorized by Congress in 1935 and that he was confident the money for construction of the base on the Quotank River, equipment and planes would be voted by Congress next year.

All Obsolete Ship Bids Are Rejected By Maritime Body

By the Associated Press.

The Maritime Commission, rejecting as "unsatisfactory" all bids opened Thursday, said yesterday it would readvertise for offers for 28 vessels in its obsolete laid-up fleet. The ships are to be sold for scrapping.

The commission also said it would open the door for alien bids. This move was prompted by a foreign offer of $625,982 received Thursday for 15 of the ships, whereas the high bid by American concerns on the 28 vessels totaled only $392,838.

The foreign bid was received from the Maritime Navigation Co., Ltd., of Liverpool, Nova Scotia, but was outlawed because the commission's original specifications restricted bids to American citizens.

The 28 ships are located at the following points: 17 at Norfolk, 7 at New Orleans and 4 at Staten Island.

The new specifications will be without restriction as to use or disposition of the ships, except that they shall not be operated in trade to, or from, United States ports.

Frank Sees Threat To U.S. Civilization

Chicago, May 28 (AP).—Dr. Glenn Frank, former president of the University of Wisconsin, said today he saw the "blunt shadows of a threefold threat to American civilization" falling over this counery.

Speaking before the Executives Club, he outlined the trio as:

1. Sociological—"The threat of another civil war, this time a war of classes."

2. Economic—"The threat of the sweeping failure to make full use of the potential plenty which physical science, invention and power have given us."

3. Political—"The threat of a deluded liberalism which in its sincere attempts to heal the sickness of 1929 may make us a people fully and finally dependent on the state."

Dr. Frank asserted the "fires for a class conflict are being fed by forces from the right and the left."

PALL MALL
THE MODERN BLEND

A cigarette that can afford to be natural

The new Pall Mall, at 15¢ for 20, is made by the same thorough English blending method as the Turkish Pall Mall, long famous as "A Shilling in London, A Quarter Here." Its tobaccos are so fine, their blending so expert, that no artificial flavouring or sweetening is needed. Here is a cigarette that can afford to be natural.

The straight tobacco flavour of Pall Mall, The Modern Blend, comes solely from the finest domestic tobaccos, enriched by selected varieties of Oriental leaf. The new Pall Mall is the only cigarette of its type which is free from artificial flavouring or sweetening. Note particularly that Pall Mall gives relief from unpleasant after-taste.

Its special English wrapping provides a tab on the back of the packet with which to open the corner, leaving the rest of the cellulose for continued protection.

Elder Appeals To Hotel Guest In Gun 'Threat'

Says Stranger He Passed in Hall Could Testify He Was in Keene.

By the Associated Press.

Greenfield, Mass., May 28.—Free under $10,000 bail, Thomas E. Elder, former dean of Mount Hermon School for Boys, tonight appealed to a "fellow lodger" at a Keene, N. H., hotel to help him refute a charge he intended to kill another retired official of the Northfield School Tuesday night.

"I don't know who he was," asserted the 60-year-old white-haired educator and cattle authority, "I only met him in the hall at about 10 o'clock Tuesday night in the hotel. I don't even know if he saw me."

"But," he added, "I'd be tickled to death to have him come forward to help me."

It was at 11 o'clock Tuesday night when S. Allan Norton, former cashier at the school, charges Elder threatened him with a shotgun as he was about to enter his home in this city, 40 miles from Keene.

Elder, smiling frequently, talked with newsmen at the home of his counsel, former District Attorney Charles Fairhurst, with whom he conferred for several hours after bail was provided for his release. He faces a hearing in district court here next Thursday on a charge of assault with intent to kill.

In detail, the former dean traced the movements of himself and his wife last Tuesday and told newsmen that that night at the hotel in Keene he took medicine "because I was suffering great heart pain."

He said he had parked his car and purchased gasoline from a station near the hotel, then went to bed and slept until "10 or 11 o'clock," when, he said, he got up to go to the bathroom. It was then, he said, that he saw his "fellow lodger" in the hotel corridor.

formerly minister of transport, was named secretary of war. Oliver Stanley became president of the board of trade, succeeding Walter Runciman, who was elevated to the peerage.

The king received those ministers and the seals of office were exchanged. later the privy council met, with the Duke of Kent, the youngest brother of the king, in attendance.

Baldwin said he would take a holiday for two or three weeks at Chequers through the courtesy of Chamberlain. Chequers is the property of the government and the country home of the Prime Minister. When his vacation is over Baldwin will live in Eaton Square, half a mile from No. 10 Downing street. The house he will occupy was turned over to him by his rich son-in-law, Capt. Arthur Howard, and there he will play the role of an elder statesman while he carries on his hobby of raising pigs.

Leaves Unified Empire.

His legacy to the practical, driving Chamberlain, observers are agreed, is an empire more completely unified in spirit and politics than at any time in its history. Baldwin, traditional British squire, has so far won his tremendous battle for British democracy, even though that battle did mean the overthrow of a beloved monarch. He elevated George to the throne, forcing Edward to abdicate, and he has moved Chamberlain from No. 11 Downing street to No. 10 to serve in his stead. That is his great victory, which is at the moment the complete triumph of conservatism.

Baldwin, in order to carry through this amazing revolution in British government, needed an issue. He found that issue in a slim, glad-eyed American woman known only slightly in England as Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson. Then, through a maze of bewildering events, the great drama was played to a climax. Edward was dethroned. The world was amazed by a love story like a chapter out of the Middle Ages, and saw a monarchy change hands without bloodshed.

Tonight those on the "inside" in Britain are generally aware Mrs. Warfield was merely an incident, the one incident needed by Baldwin in his grim determination to entrench the traditional ruling conservative class of no longer so "merry England."

Edward Indiscreet.

Edward, as King, was moody, difficult at times and strangely prone to stir the fears and the prejudices of the great. His trips through the depressed areas, his eloquent and sometimes profane insistence on action to relieve the lot of the toilers in the great mining and shipbuilding centers, aroused many persons of title and wealth.

In fact, Edward showed signs he might embark upon the dangerous course of making the monarchy something more than a ceremony and an affair of glittering and meaningless functions. In the titanic struggle that followed Edward left the throne, and over the world the electric cry was heard as he departed to an exile on the Continent. "Baldwin wins." Tonight the cry is "Baldwin wins again."

Neville Chamberlain, son of Joseph and half-brother of Austen Chamberlain, wins the dream of his career, to be premier of England. And for weeks, it is apparent now, he must have known his ambition was about to be realized. Everyone who saw him in public or private in the last few weeks was struck by his confident bearing, his figure tall and straight at 68.

Appearance Deceptive.

One meeting him for the first time might feel he is not to be trusted too far. His face is dark, inscrutable. His cheeks are hollow, the eyes deep-sunken. His hair is jet black, with a touch of white, brushed straight back. His fingers are long and delicate, and his high, wing collar is always too large for him, making his long neck look scrawnier than it really is. But Neville Chamberlain belies his looks. No man in British politics is less devious than he. In his nature the quicksilver changes of Lloyd George, the elephantine drama of Ramsay MacDonald and the subtlety of Baldwin find no counterpart.

He is considered tactless at times, he is gruff, but he is known as a "square-shooter" in all his political and personal affairs. He does not pledge his word lightly, but once given he never departs from it.

He has few intimate friends. It is difficult to know him. By choice he is one of the least approachable men in British public life. He shrinks from conviviality because he does not enjoy it. Even his recreations are of the kind that do not require him to be sociable. When he wants to take his mind off public problems, he likes to steal away for a bit of fishing. In London he sometimes goes to a concert with his wife, the only person who really knows him, shares his screts and his ambitions. Nearly every morning they can be seen walking together in St. James Park, wrapped up with each other as if they were on their honeymoon.

Chamberlain can have little hope of peace in the first days of his administration. One good break came with the settlement of the London bus strike and removal of the danger of a coal strike. But he faces a fight of his own making—on the excess profits tax on industry to help pay Britain's gigantic rearmament bill, which he drafted. It is expected he will tighten the lines in many quarters as he carries out the tremendous task of spending the $7,500,000,000 for defense.

"Prosperity Tax" Assailed.

In addition to his other worries, Chamberlain heard rumblings tonight of revolt in the House of Commons over his "tax on prosperity." In the house five Conservatives scheduled a motion reading:

"This house cannot agree to the second reading of the finance bill until arrangements have been made for furthering investigation of the effect of part three (the national defense 'contribution') upon trade recovery and expansion of employment and until the views of those engaged in the trades and businesses affected are fully ascertained and reported."

And it is not unlikely the Duke of Windsor will continue to be a thorn in his side. Many here do not believe Edward will give up his determination to make his bride "Her Royal Highness."

Under the decree published in the London Gazette, Windsor remains "His Royal Highness," but his wife and children will be entitled only to the form of address applied to the wife and children of an ordinary duke. Mrs. Warfield will become "Her Grace, the Duchess of Windsor." The eldest sons of ordinary dukes take the second title of their father, such as earl, marquis or viscount. The others are lords and ladies.

No Official Ranking.

By the provisions of the "letters patent," Mrs. Warfield will have no ranking among the seven women of the royal family—Queen Elizabeth, the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, Queen Mother Mary, the princess royal and the Duchesses of Gloucester and Kent.

Until tonight even those close to the court and Windsor were not aware that for five months the duke was not entitled to be called "His Royal Highness." Edward, it became known, was ignorant of this situation. He had assumed he was "H. R. H."

Friends of the former King here deplored the government's latest move. Others opposed to him declared he had "been put in his place" by the reminder King George still has power to control his life.

Windsor's fight to give his wife royal rank was based largely on the contention custom permits a wife to attain the status of her husband if she is of lower rank before their marriage.

Action Is Unique.

Authorities on England's complicated system of rank and heraldry said never before had a wife been placed on a different plane from her husband. King George V made both Queen Elizabeth—then the Duchess of York—and the Duchess of Gloucester, his daughter-in-law, "Royal Highnesses" after their marriages, but that was considered merely a special act of courtesy and technically unnecessary. It was assumed on those occasions wives of the King's sons automatically attained royal rank.

The Express, organ of Lord Beaverbrook, today appeared with a huge headline declaring "Mrs. Simpson will not be Her Royal Highness." The paper declared the official decree "makes a break with tradition."

Meanwhile tonight all London, all England is buzzing with the latest developments in England's greatest drama in centuries. Even the tremendously significant political changes of the day are submerged under the waves of emotion aroused by the blow to the hopes of Edward.

Friends of the Duke and Mrs. Warfield declare her loss of the royal title will destroy any plans they may have had for returning to England for a reunion with the royal family.

Persons close to the Chateau de Cande declared the duke, six days before his marriage, had been provided with a fresh supply of money. It also was said the couple may visit the United States on their honeymoon.

Sir Walter Monckton, attorney general for the Duchy of Cornwall and legal adviser to Edward during the abdication crisis, was said to have arrived at Monts by plane yesterday with money for Edward.

Others discussed unconfirmed reports that a surprise visit by the Duke of Kent, Edward's favorite brother, might have been considered. It was not known whether the reported visit would be before or after the wedding.

World Sympathetic.

While rumors were flying about, on every side were heard words of sympathy for the lovers who have, it is admitted even by their foes, waged a game fight. They remember the dark moods of Edward, how just recently he tramped with his beloved in the rain-soaked gardens of the chateau on their morning "constitutional."

Edward puffed nervously at a cigarette, then threw it from him. At his side the woman whose love had taken him from a throne and given him to history as one of its greatest romantics, stood silent. They had just been informed "there will be no members of the royal family present" at their wedding. Baldwin had won again. Once more a desire warm in the heart of the former king was crushed. It was a dreadful blow to Edward, gay and sullen by turns but boyishly eager always to win honors for "his woman."

At 42, defeated in every effort except to win the woman he loves, what are his feelings? That is a thought in the minds of many in London. Does he suffer remorse and searing regret for the loss of an empire? It is well known that during his first few days of exile at the estate of Baron Eugene de Rothchild at Enzesfeld in Austria he suffered intensely. A member of the household at that time declared he was downhearted and aging.

"He sat for an hour, almost in tears, his face twitching," the informant declared. But there were other days when reports declared he seemed happy, that his black moods were less frequent.

Tonight latest reports from Monts were to the effect Edward would not at first believe his bride could not take royal rank. News of his latest setback reached the chateau while Mrs. Warfield was showing her wedding finery. The duke hurried to her, his face white and haggard. They talked alone. How she received the blow, what they talked of is not known.

Tonight another man sits in the almost shabby quarters of the British prime minister—alone—perhaps musing upon the changes and chances of empire and love. Do his thoughts wander, perhaps, to the quiet beauty of Monts and lovers' griefs? Does he think of blood-soaked fields in Spain, where half a billion dollars of British investments may be destroyed in the red horror of war? Does he picture the great sprawling lands that together make the greatest empire in the world, held together by faith and ideals, stronger than mere frontiers, which yet might be destroyed by the mystic flame a solitary man inspired by a great love can kindle? Does he?—perhaps, perhaps.

Federal Waste Greatest Ever, Byrd Declares

Strikes at 'Bureaucratic' Government Form in Va. Speech.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., May 28.—Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virgina, told University of Richmond students today that "there exists at Washington the most wasteful and bureaucratic form of government that has ever been known in our history."

Byrd, speaking at the university convocation, said that "with the extended operations of the Federal Government, some of which may be beneficent and desirable, the cost of these numerous bureaucratic machines of duplicated activities is too great to be borne.

"They are rapidly becoming frankensteins—the contrivances of ingenious idealistic theorists—that may grow so powerful as to destroy the right of citizens to liberty, life and happiness," he said.

At the outset of his address in the Virginia capital where he sat for four years as governor, Byrd said it would be "a national calamity were public faith to decline" in the honesty and independence of judgment of the Supreme Court.

Referring briefly to his demand early this week for abandonment of the Shenandoah Park Homesteads, a Resettlement Administration project, Byrd said "it was a disagreeable task for me when I publicly asked that a $1,500,000 Resettlement Administration allocation in my own community be salvaged.

"I did so, however," he said, "because of my belief that the money was wastefully expended and because I believe that economy, if effective, must begin at home. So long as public officials and citizens generally demand expenditures of Federal money in their own communities we will be unable to reduce the distribution of Federal money."

"A grand total of 1,466,263 regular Federal employes, or one out of every 80 citizens, is drawing regular pay from the Federal Government.

"The total pay roll of all Federal, State and local employes in 1935 was $5,679,000,000, or 10 per cent of the national income.

"The Federal Government pays an annual rent bill of $25,000,000.

For Virginia, he contrasted its "pay-as-you-go" system with other States and said the Old Dominion was the only State not to issue a bond since the War Between the States.

"The way to permanent prosperity," he declared, "is still the difficult path of economy and efficiency in government, the balancing of budgets of States and Nation."

Suspect Detained In Ranch Slaying

Mammoth, Ariz., May 28 (AP).—A mysterious "Haunted Corral" slaying drew pistol-toting officers today to the remote Aravaipa Canyon country, scene of many a bloody cattle feud.

A dispute over range and water rights—age-old sources of trouble in the West—was reported to have preceded the shooting.

Far back in the mountains of eastern Arizona, Henry Towner, rancher, was found dying in "Haunted Corral" on the old Aspey ranch, Deputy Sheriff R. C. Kinsey reported. His arm had been almost severed by a rifle bullet. Another shot struck him in the abdomen.

Leading a posse, Kinsey arrested another rancher, took him to the county jail at Florence and detained him pending further investigation. No charge has been placed against the man in custody.

Arts Commission Planning War Coin

William Marks Simpson, of Baltimore, conferred yesterday with the Fine Arts Commission with regard to the design of the projected Antietam battlefield memorial coin.

Issuance of the coin to commemorate the Civil War battle has been proposed in a bill now before Congress. The measure has passed the Senate and is on the House calendar, having been reported favorably by the House Committee on Coins.

Maryland officials are planning a celebration to mark the anniversary next September. The battle was fought in 1862.

Judge Isaac R. Hitt Reported Resting Well

Police Court Judge Isaac R. Hitt was reported last night to be improving from an influenza attack, complicated by a kidney disorder, which sent him to Sibley Hospital Tuesday. He spent a comfortable day yesterday and was resting well, according to attendants at the hospital.

Judge Hitt, whose appointment to the Police Court bench expired March 18, after a 12-year tenure of duty, has not been reappointed as yet. Neither has a successor been named.

CCC Boy's Body Sought.

Pembroke, Va., May 28 (AP).—Two score or more searchers continued their efforts today to locate the body of Earl Brown, Sarasota, Fla., enrollee at the local CCC camp, who went down in 15 feet of water while a party of CCC men were swimming in New River here late yesterday afternoon.

Mexican Catholics Launch 'Stay-in' To Open Churches

Nogales, Sonora, Mex., May 28 (AP). A "stay-in" strike by which Catholics hoped to force the Mexican government to reopen their long-closed churches spread today throughout the State of Sonora.

More than 100 worshipers occupied pews of the Nogales Cathedral, whose doors they broke open last night.

From interior cities of Sonora came reports that similar demonstrations were in progress at other churches, padlocked several years ago in a dispute between church and state.

The religious strikers here declared they would remain in the church until the government returned the property to church officials.

A Thing Of Beauty.

After almost five years of work, San Francisco yesterday dedicated its Golden Gate Bride, the largest suspension structure in the world. The week's celebration planned in honor of the event, however, is somewhat clouded by a hotel strike called because German flags float amid the city's street decorations. The mayor has properly refused to remove the swastika banners. For science and engineering soar above all nationalisms. Galileo's discoveries were the world's; and so with Faraday's, Pasteur's, Noguchi's, Edison's and Eckener's. So, too, now with Joseph Strauss'.

Joseph Strauss built the Golden Gate Bridge. In 1919 he drew his first plans for it, but not until 1933 was he able to see them materialize. There was fear of earthquakes, but the bridge has been so built that it will be safer in time of an upheaval than an office building. It was protested that a foreign invader could bottle up the harbor by blasting the bridge, but it is designed to drop beyond reach of all keels once its cables are cut. It was argued that high winds and temperature variations would snap four-fifths of a mile of hanging steel, but it has been constructed to swing in gales and to raise or lower its deck as much as 20 feet if the weather demands.

Each of the two towers of the bridge rises 191 feet higher than the Washington Monument. Approximately 80,000 miles of wire were spun into the cables from which the six-lane roadway and two sidewalks are suspended. Ten men lost their lives in building the bridge—a comparatively small number for an enterprise of this sort. Its total cost will be roughly $35,000,000 (all privately raised), which is expected to be repaid by 50-cent tolls in 35 years, after which the State may take it over, perhaps removing the tolls.

But all these stupendous figures miss the principal point of the structure—its perfect synchronization of grace and usefulness. Its long sweep, its majestic height and the invaluable conveniences it offers the metropolitan areas on either side of the Golden Gate confirm admirably Plato's dictum that "the beautiful consists in utility and the power to produce some good."

Ratification Called For.

The eight agreements approved by the Buenos Aires conference of last December have now been submitted by the President to the Senate. Reflecting in constructive fashion the spirit of Pan Americanism and of the "good neighbor" policy, there is every reason why they should be speedily ratified.

Four of the agreements are designed to strengthen the machinery for maintenance of peace in this hemisphere, three are nonpolitical and the remaining one is a protocol under which the nations of the Americas bind themselves to refrain from interfering in each other's internal or external affairs.

It has been the unhappy history of more than one Pan American conference that, while the delegates have unanimously approved far-reaching agreements, the reception later given to those pacts in the individual capitals has not been generally enthusiastic. In consequence, many of these agreements have become dead letters. For instance, at the time the Buenos Aires conference met, not a single one of the four general inter-American agreements, including the Saavedra Lamas Pact and the Gondra Convention, nor the Kellogg Pact, had been ratified by all of the 21 republics.

It would be most unfortunate were similar neglect to follow in the wake of the great Buenos Aires conference which owed its existence to American initiative. Prompt approval of all eight agreements by the Senate of the United States would give a real impetus to general ratification and is, therefore, much to be desired.

China's Envoys.

Few diplomats accredited to the United States have won such widespread acclaim and made so many warm friends among all classes of the American people as did Dr. Sao-ke Alfred Sze, until the other day Chinese Ambassador here. Combining great ability with rare personal charm, Dr. Sze did yeoman service for his nation during the many years of his stay in Washington. And it is safe to say that few other foreigners have better understood the American people and Nation than he did.

His departure is universally regretted. His record as China's chief representative in the United States is a very high one for his successors to shoot at. But the new Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Chengting T. Wang, is anything but a novice in the field of international diplomacy.

Although most of his active life has been spent in China rather than abroad, Dr. Wang's principal interest has been in the field of China's foreign relations. One of that nation's representatives at the Paris peace conference of 1919, he later served with real distinction as foreign minister of the Nanking government. Together with Dr. Sze and a few others, he belongs to that remarkable band of veteran diplomats who have "made" China's foreign policy.

Dr. Wang arrives in Washington at a time when China's relations with the United States are as friendly as they have ever been. He can be relied upon to do all in his power to see that this happy situation continues to prevail.

An Awakening In Congress.

Encouraging signs of a more independent attitude on the part of Congress are beginning to appear in connection with several legislative proposals. Congressmen who heretofore accepted White House measures as a matter of course are beginning to ask questions. Some others who were restless under the "rubber-stamp" regime are now in open revolt against various aspects of the Administration's program.

The controversy over relief funds is merely the latest and by no means the most significant bid for the restoration of legislative leadership to Congress. In this case, members appear to have kicked over the traces largely for the purpose of manifesting their dissatisfaction with existing procedure. Being unable or unwilling to effect the drastic changes that would be needed to transform the WPA into an efficient and economical relief system, they are content to tie the President's program into knots.

Fortunately, there is evidence of more constructive opposition to executive control over all national policy. The new farm bill is undergoing critical analysis in the House Agriculture Committee. While this measure to establish the "ever-normal" granary and revive control over important farm crops was not sent to Capitol Hill by the White House, it has the indorsement of Secretary Wallace, in principle, and is generally regarded as an AAA bill.

Leaders of the farm bloc in the House are frankly skeptical of the measure because of its probable cost, its doubtful constitutionality and the dissatisfaction of some important agricultural groups. It is too early, of course, to conjecture what the fate of the bill will be. The important point is that it is being studied critically.

Similar discontent is being manifested over the President's ambitious Government reorganization bill. Whether or not Senate Leader Robinson actually said failure of the bill would be "no public calamity," a number of Senators are known to hold that view. They see serious disadvantages in the proposal as well as some desirable reforms. If their skepticism leads to a more systematic and thorough scrutiny of the controversial section of the measure, costly blunders may be avoided.

In general, this more independent attitude seems to be traceable to the revolt in the Senate against the President's bill to pack the Supreme Court. For many legislators who had in the past apathetically accepted all proposals emanating from the White House this bill served as a sharp awakening to the dangers of personal government. Congress has not yet regained sufficient initiative or leadership to work out its own legislative program. But at least it is thinking more seriously about the consequences of resigning still greater powers into the hands of the President.

Even as sympathetic an observer as Dean Alfange, whose book, "The Supreme Court and the National Will," won the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Award, points out that much of the New Deal legislation has been enacted under a "Presidential dictatorship founded on consent, acquiescence or mere tolerance." Congress cannot too quickly end that chapter and resume its rightful function of formulating our national policies. With such vital problems as the new labor standards bill and the proposal for regulation of agriculture again pressing for action, every sign of an independent spirit in Congress is cause for gratification.

The Wane Of "Sit-Downs."

The current outbreak of strikes serves to emphasize the waning importance of the sit-down technique. Sporadic instances of its employment can be found, of course, one of the most conspicuous being the "stay-down" strike of a group of Illinois miners. However, the major disturbances in the steel industry are proceeding in the usual orthodox fashion, with walkouts followed by picketing. Those who remain inside are workers avoiding the picket lines, not illegal occupants of company property defying eviction.

In view of the dangerous potentialities of the "sit-down" strike, its rapid decline in favor is cause for gratification. It is especially encouraging to know that the change of policy has come about with a minimum amount of forceful suppression. A few States have passed laws to curb this evil and Congress approved a mildly condemnatory resolution declaring sit-downs to be "illegal and contrary to sound public policy." On the whole, however, the sit-downers came off very well in their encounters with the law and secured some substantial concessions from employers.

An aroused public opinion is apparently the chief reason for the change of tactics. A recent poll conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion showed that 65 per cent of those voting favored the use of force to eject sit-down strikers. In all parts of the country the poll indicated that sentiment was hostile, whether the voters were young or old, from the city or from the country. The only group returning a majority against forcible eviction of sit-down strikers were those on relief.

Under these circumstances, it would be extremely bad tactics for organized labor to defy public opinion and risk coming into violent conflict with the public authorities. Moreover, the sit-down strike is a weapon that often puts immense power in the hands of a small minority. Intelligent labor leaders are not likely to look with favor upon practices that might so easily destroy their hold over a disciplined majority.

Obviously, a policy that involves illegal trespass upon private property is anathema to anybody who believes in the institutional foundations of our present-day industrial society. The indictment of the sit-down strike, in short, is so convincing that it now seems surprising that the country became seriously alarmed when it was at the height of its short-lived popularity among certain labor groups.

Futile Sniping At WPA.

Addressing a conference of social workers at Indianapolis, Relief Administrator Hopkins said: "It is high time that we started thinking about unemployment realistically and working out remedies on a reasonably long-range basis." That is sound advice; it should be called to the attention of those Congressmen who are shooting at the Administration relief bill without aiming at any particularly vulnerable spot.

The House vote to cut $2,000 from the salary paid Mr. Hopkins is a petty, but exasperating instance of haphazard sniping that accomplishes nothing. Neither essential reforms of the relief system nor substantial budgetary economies can be achieved by the indiscriminate amendment antics in which the House has been indulging.

It is encouraging on the other hand, to find that some Congressmen are beginning to reassert their right to control the public purse. Even if the revolting House members should go down to a deserved defeat in the present instance, they will have learned some valuable lessons and they may ultimately stumble upon some practical economies.

The difficulties encountered in trying to reduce the WPA budget emphasize the need for radical reform in the system of administering relief. Moreover, the time for that reform is at hand. Mr. Hopkins himself no longer regards Federal relief as an emergency activity. He is pressing for a permanent relief organization based on the assumption that there will always be a large volume of unemployment due to depression, technological changes and other factors. Unemployment insurance, he says, is only a "first line of defense," and must be supported by additional means of helping the unemployed.

This is undoubtedly true and any comprehensive relief program must be developed in the light of that knowledge. Congress would be acting in a thoroughly irresponsible manner if it were to slash the work relief appropriation recklessly without making adequate provision for the thousands of unemployed affected by its retrenchment order. Mr. Hopkins' plea for a "comprehensive and well-integrated" program, linking unemployment insurance with public assistance after benefits have been exhausted, is both rational and timely. Unfortunately, the particular kind of program he advocates is not consistent with attainment of the essential economies for which Congress is now making a distracted and unorganized search.

So long as we maintain a system of Federal relief which provides jobs for the able-bodied unemployed, relief will continue to be costly. Instead of manifesting a childish dislike for Mr. Hopkins by cutting his salary those Congressmen who disapprove his relief policies ought to be devising a better and more economical plan that would lighten the budget and at the same time make adequate provision for the needy. It can be done by transferring responsibility for administration of relief to the States and local governments and by substituting direct benefits for WPA jobs.

Vodka Juleps Next?

The first weather report radioed down by the Russians who are camping on—or practically on—the North Pole is most disappointing.

Of course, it was cold, and for Washingtonians tasting their first summer sultriness perhaps that should have been enough. But aside from the questionable refrigeration value of the report, it was not much. A temperature of 8.6 Fahrenheit, as reported, could be reported from Hains Point most any winter. And "high clouds" and "a northwest wind" are certainly banal enough.

We wish the Russians had stayed home and not begun tampering with other people's perfectly harmless illusions. We liked to think of it forever snowing at the North Pole.

Red Rider Repeal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One hour was allotted on Monday for debate of the conference report on so-called "red rider" in the House of Representatives. The distinguished "Mayoress" of Washington had charge of the time. Nearly one-half of it was given to a Congressman to explain why he did not oppose the report. Then about one-half of the remaining time was given to another Congressman to explain why he did not oppose the report. Then about one-half of the remaining time was given to another Congressman to explain why he favored the report.

Was the remaining time (constituting only one-fourth of the total time) given to opponents of the report? Oh, no! From my seat in the gallery it appeared that the opponents were allotted no time whatever, but instead the distinguished "Mayoress" moved the previous question and obtained her great victory without the other side being heard at all.

Earle Browder told us during the past year that Soviet Russia believed in majority rule, and that the majority did not wish free speech of an opposition kind, which accounted for the one-sided freedom of speech in Russia. Is this what we are coming to in America, and even in the House of Representatives, and by those who are all the time talking "freedom?"

Strangely enough, this seems to be the kind of one-sided freedom sought by those advocating repeal of so-called "red rider." Congress has at no time sought to keep truthful and factual data about Russia or communism from public school pupils, and the corporation counsel emphatically so declared in official opinion of September 5, 1935, the law being intended merely "to protect the American system of Government-supported public-school system."

If the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, about communism, had been told to pupils in the D. C. public schools, the school authorities are well aware that there never would have been any "red rider." The rights of parents and the Nation to protect the youth from false and deceptive molding in the public schools, are necessarily superior to any academic freedom of the school authorities.

The school authorities will do well to lose no time in putting their house in order. The "red rider" repeal bill as passed does not recognize any right to continue false academic freedom in the public schools. True academic freedom does not tolerate communistic propaganda, or other false and subversive matter, in the tax-supported public schools.

Foreign 'Insults.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On May 26, Berliner Boersen-Zeitung, Hitler's mouthpiece in Berlin, shook a fist at us again in the course of reporting the hauling down of Nazi flag by Communists in San Francisco. The paper called all Americans "Jews" and "Communists." How long will our country suffer such insults?

'Aristotle' Replies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Grant Harris reads too much, but doesn't read the right sort of stuff. He should read what Max Eastman, Andre Gide and others who toured Russia have to say about that country.

"Anti-Liberal" has only contempt for the liberals. But if it had not been for the despised liberals, all those who are radicals would long since have been exterminated. Who was it showed up the Harlan atrocities but the liberal members of Congress? Who has led the civil liberties fights but liberals?

"Anti" says that the "future of all democratic countries hangs in the balance" with Russia. How can an absolute dictatorship under the thumb of one man assist democracy? Russia is decidedly not a democracy. He says: 'It is better to execute 100 traitors than to have millions suffer from the schemes of anti-Soviet plotters." No doubt. But how do we know they really are "traitors" and how do we know it will not be thousands executed instead of a mere 100? From all accounts "sedition" is spreading like wildfire in the Soviet Union.

We do not have to take "Hobson's choice" in our political and economic thinking. We do not have to be either Fascist or Communist. There is a middle ground—liberalism—democracy—the rule of the masses.

The American people as a whole are able to read and when persuaded that a certain procedure is advisable, they do not hesitate to put it into effect. This is shown in the emphatic manner in which the President was rebuffed on his plan for packing the Supreme Court but supported on his other social legislation. The people do not let one man do all their thinking for them. In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom. Here in America the real liberals are fighting not so much for any certain plan but merely to keep the channels of free speech and democratic procedure open so that new ways may be tried.

It is my opinion that the Republican and Democratic parties are both a failure in trying to solve our present social problems. But that does not require that we must hold our noses, open our mouth, and swallow a horse-dose of Fascist castor oil or Communist "ideology." However, the real liberals are as content to let the Fascists rave or the Communists orate as they are to tolerate antiquated shibboleths of Republican or Democratic standpatters. Free speech means that. They do not have free speech in Russia. They do not have democracy in Russia. Why then hold up either Russia, Italy or Germany as models for us? ARISTOTLE.

Against Helium Exports.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of existing world-wide social unrest and the feverish armament race between several nations, many of us were surprised to learn of some of our high officials approving the idea of permitting the use of helium gas—ostensibly for the purpose of humane and experimental enterprise—by foreign nations.

It is reasonable to believe that inquiry upon the part of such officials would discover a vast number of our citizens utterly opposed to such action. These citizens know that the very nations most eager to obtain possession of helium are those which experience past and present counsels peace-loving America least to trust. Such nations as deem honorable treaties mere scraps of paper, whose persecutions of hapless minorities and races are a stench in the nostrils of humanity, and whose mad tendencies threaten to engulf civilization in the hell of war, do not deserve opportunity to transform a blessing into an added means of waging war.

To permit such nations the use of helium is to risk serving as their ally in their madness. Let's hearken to experience and forbid exportation of helium.

Supreme Court Since Reform Proposal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial today you complain that the Supreme Court is "under a cloud" because of public suspicion—which you feel to be unjustified—that its recent decisions were the result of the President's court reorganization threat. Permit me to remind you that among those who have spread this suspicion is to be found none other than your own political commentator, Franklyn Waltman. At the time of the Wagner act decisions, he wrote: "Perhaps the election returns last November have had an effect on the court; perhaps President Roosevelt's proposed reorganization scheme has brought the desired effect, just as threats in Great Britain to pack the House of Lords have had the desired effect without the necessity of ever making good the threat." Again at the time of Justice Van Devanter's retirement, Mr. Waltman went so far as to suggest that the whole court reorganization plan was something not meant to be carried out literally but was simply a piece of Machiavellian tactics designed to bend the Supreme Court to the President's will, and that it was succeeding in its purpose. Similarly, another Republican commentator, Dorothy Thompson, suggested that as between carrying out the President's court plan and the court's seeing the light through reversing decisions and retiring its conservative members there was only a difference of form—but the Supreme Court's method was the better form, and good form still counts.

That the Supreme Court has acted under pressure rather than through a genuine conversion to a new point of view is indicated by two remarkable incidents. The first has to do with the manner of annoucing the reversal of the Adkins minimum wage decision of 1923. Last June in the New York case, the majority of the court argued that the New York case could not be distinguished from the Adkins case, and that the New York law was therefore null and void. Thereupon the State of New York filed a petition for a rehearing and asked specifically that the Adkins decision be overruled. The petition was denied last October.

In the Washington minimum wage case, decided on March 29, Chief Justice Hughes, speaking for the majority, overruled the Adkins case; he explained that in the New York case, the Court had not been asked to overrule the Adkins case, and omitted all reference to the New York petition for a rehearing and to its denial by the court. You can imagine how the New York attorney general must have felt on reading this decision. The most charitable explanation of this episode is that the Court was executing a disorderly retreat, and had no time to think of all the proprieties.

The second episode has to do with the old-age pension case decided last Monday. As you no doubt remember, the Supreme Court in a 5-to-4 decision in May, 1935, threw out Federal pensions for railroad employes on the ground that the act was "not in purpose or effect a regulation of interstate commerce within the meaning of the Constitution." Inasmuch as railroads were manifestly subject to Federal jurisdiction, whereas there was indeed great doubt as to whether other forms of employment were subject to Federal regulation at all, one would have supposed that Justice Roberts' decision in the railroad retirement act barred the general system of old-age pensions as well.

One does not have to be a lawyer to realize that last Monday's decision validating old-age pensions overrules the 1935 decision. But did the Supreme Court say so? No, the 1935 decision was not even mentioned. The majority opinion did not recall the case, and the minority opinion was not committed to writing! Thus did the minority collaborate in maintaining a good front for the court in a time of crisis. Needless to say, a genuine change of view would not have needed the protection of a conspiracy of silence.

Personally, I should say that a frank reorganization of the court is more calculated to maintain the respect of the public, than this method of yielding to the pressure of the reorganization threat. But the conservative strategists have devised a scheme which they think will discredit President Roosevelt. Well, don't blame the President if this scheme serves to discredit the court more than it does the President.

The Front Porch.

MOTHER'S letter, the one he had been waiting for so long, came at last. George took it with him and walking down the long, artificially lighted hallway stepped upon the fire escape where he could be alone. Below and away from him the city spread, its lower stories and stretches of its wide streets obscured by green trees, and in the distance the shining river moved placidly beneath the waning sun. Sitting on the iron grating, his back against the faded brick wall, he open the envelope addressed in his mother's hand.

"My dear son," she had written, "well, all I can say is that the time has come. Father has spent most of today seeing about the details for both deeds, and we are going to move. When I let myself consider everything it seems hard to leave a house in which you have lived for 20 years. You children grew up in this house, but I'm not going to think of all that now. Already I'm looking forward to fixing up the new one, and you know, in one way I don't mind leaving here at all. The only thing I really hate to give up is the front porch——"

George raised his eyes and was flooded with recollections of the front porch. They did not come chronologically, or consecutively as the events occur in one's life, but instead all at once. They were very vivid to him. In his mind he saw the porch as clearly as though he were home again, standing on the low top step beneath the vines trained across the entryway. The porch was wide and long, covering the front of the house, and its floor was red concrete cut into squares like tile, and waxed. At the west end, the porch turned and passed the first window of the dining room, then two steps led down past a clump of rhododendron into the "side yard." Here a cherry tree hung over both a corner of the porch roof and the lattice fence. Boxwood grew in the narrow yard at the porch's west end, and forsythia at its east.

At its east end the porch fell away into four or five steps and its roof became the porte-cochere over the driveway. Both ends of the porch, above the brick wall, were filled in with trellises over which the Virginia creeper vines had become matted and tangled. There were two other vines, too, a dark ivy that kept its leaves all winter and a lighter ivy that lost its leaves in the fall. Until now George had never thought of it, but he did not even know the names of those vines.

On summer evenings the family always sat on the porch, and now George remembered those evenings with the street light between two maple trees on the curbing falling through the vines to make a pattern on the grass rugs of the ferns in the wicker fernery that he had painted green for his mother. Behind the evergreens in front of the porch the family rocked or swung, talking with its relatives and its neighbors. George could almost see the red glow of his father's cigar and hear his father's voice discussing politics with some male caller in the swing, or hear his mother's soft voice agreeing with one of his aunts that So-and-so deserved a lot of credit because she certainly had had a time of it.

In the summer his sisters had had their "dates" on the porch, too, and then "the family" sat patiently indoors. But there were times, back in the days when a victrola was an imperative adjunct to every social call of the young, when his sisters and their dates preferred the house. Then through the open doors and windows the family listened absently to records by Gene Austin and Jesse Crawford and all the orchestras.

When his sisters came home from college bringing classmates as house-guests, there would be bridge on the porch in the mornings and lunch afterward. Somehow he had managed successfully always to be absent then, and when he returned in the late afternoon, usually with a wet bathing suit in his hand, the porch was again what his mother called "straight" and ready for the evening.

One night George had slept on the porch. That was the time a half-dozen boys, visiting in town, had rolled out their camping blankets on the floor and he had given up his own room to be with them. And he remembered, too, the Saturday mornings when he washed the family car on the driveway and afterward in his bare feet had turned the hose onto the porch.

No, he had never thought all this before. The porch was there, a part of the house just as the house was a part of the family's life and of his. He had never really thought that the time would come when the family would ever leave the house or the porch. Why, it was like the family breaking up. It was like losing a friend in a way you can not bring yourself to talk about. Now, he understood his mother's feeling, the regret that she did not dare express to him, the sacrifice she was making in giving up the porch.

He realized he had not yet finished his mother's letter and that already the sun had dropped beyond the rooftops of the city. Already the light was failing and it was growing cool up on the fire escape. He looked down at the page in his hand.

"But I must tell you," his mother had written, "that while the new house has no front porch at all—only some steps and a little entry—it does have one on the side. It's not as large as our porch here and it has no shrubs or vines about it. But tomorrow Father is planting both, and he says it really won't take them very long to grow——"

Fair Enough

Mr. Taggart's Disappointment.

A CRUEL WORLD may laugh out loud at the diplomatic mishap to Paul V. McNutt in Manila, but little Tom Taggart, of French Lick, Ind., will be one who does not see the humor of the incident. Mr. Taggart's horse fell on his face at the very first jump after years of schooling and training and a few rather dashing victories in the minor politics of the American Legion and his old home State.

As an old horseman, Mr. Taggart set mighty high store by his McNutt. A show horse McNutt was, with grace and style and body, an arch to his neck and a big, bold stride. Not a favorite, to be sure, but impressive, nevertheless, and Mr. Taggart saw qualities in him which were invisible to impartial experts.

But a man is likely to lean to his own charger, minimizing the faults and the virtues of his opponents, and, moreover, anything can happen in racing, baseball and politics. There was a chance that some other steed would be kicked at the barrier or take the fence or run the wrong way, and the hazards of the track seemed as strong against the others.

But, then, it happened to Mr. Taggart's steed first, and if you look closely you will see Little Tom down there by the first jump giving his McNutt many rapid kicks in the slats ere he turns to walk home past the derisive throng in the stands, who always thought Mr. Taggart had nothing better than a quarter-miler, anyway.

• • • •

AND HOW VERY ODD it is, to be sure, that history should repeat in this particular way in the career of another stalwart Indiana statesman! Mr. McNutt was sent to the Philippines with high hopes, and at least a little prestige, and hardly had he shaken the wrinkles out of his white linen suits, when he was demanding that the natives drink to him ere drinking to their own country, with an implied promise to civilize them with a Krag if they didn't.

It was a mere matter of a drink which caused similar embarrassment in the political life of old Charlie Fairbanks in the long ago, and was like to ruin that pious Methodist, if, indeed, it didn't actually put him down.

As to that, my recollection is not quite clear, but the horror of the incident impressed my youthful mind, and I still recall those persistent Tom Powers cartoons in Mr. Hearst's papers showing Mr. Fairbanks raising a cocktail with a cherry in it.

Mr. Fairbanks gave a political dinner at his home in Indianapolis, and cocktails indubitably were served. His church dinners were dry and his political dinners wet. The most painful fact of the whole tragedy was that the news of the cocktails was written by a naive young reporter on a paper which Mr. Fairbanks secretly owned, and printed in the master's own paper to his own awful distress.

His Methodist friends wished to know at once if this foul thing were true, and though Charlie may have wished with all his great, honest, straightforward political heart to deny the filthy libel, he could hardly do so at the expense of his own journal and in the face of much testimony.

• • • •

PROHIBITION IS DEAD and gone now, to be sure, and it is no longer dangerous on politico-moral grounds for a Hoosier statesman to take or even demand a drink, but Mr. Taggart's man McNutt went about it in a way that reflects no dignity on a boy who was raised in a land of branchwater, shoe polish and silo juice.

The Hoosier drinking habits are such that there will be no sympathy at home with a man who puts on airs in a foreign land and makes an international incident of his own place in the batting order as toasts are drunk from crystal shells on tendril stems.

In Indiana they just pass the bottle, whether corn or square-face, from hand to hand, and any man who wipes the neck on his palm or shirt sleeve ere inserting the same in his features for a friendly drag is deemed to have insulted the Hoosier next before him.

The only rule of courtesy observed in Indiana is that it is no gentleman who would suck the bottom of the bottle up through the neck—an offense which, unfortunately, was rather common during the years of the bone-dry law, when a man could go to prison for allowing that he could use a drink if someone should seize him by force and sling it down his throat.

What will Mr. Taggart do now, do you think? Send his McNutt down to the tanyard, maybe, and warm up the next best hide in the barn?

The Once Over

Reaction of a Movie Fan.

Well, I'm rather fond of England,
And I like a little swank;
Pageantry I find appealing—
I've respect for royal rank;
George the Sixth has my best wishes—
May his reign be one of ease! . . .
But my plea is, "No more pictures
Of that coronation, PLEASE!"

II.

I can go for yards of ermine,
And I cheer for regal style;
Scenes of medieval splendor
Leave me speechless for a while;
I'm a sucker for white horses,
Golden hacks and all that stuff,
But those coronation movies—
Well, enough is quite enough!

III.

Oh, I love the dear old Abbey,
And I'm fond of London town;
I am moved by all the color
When a kingdom "goes to town;"
I like silk and I like velvet—
To all big shows I'm a friend,
But those coronation pictures . . .
Will there never be an end?

IV.

Reverence for fine traditions
Is a thing I go for strong;
In respect for ancient routines
I can't see a thing that's wrong;
Both Elizabeth and George have
My best wishes, bless the pair!
But the photos and the movies . . .
Boy, I think I've had my share!

V.

I can stand Gerard in knee pants—
Ridicule I will oppose;
I don't mind long lines of people
In the strangest kind of clothes;
Balconies and swords and scepters—
Scenes where King George takes a bow—
I've sat through them by the hour,
And I've had enough by now.

VI.

So, three rousing cheers for England!
And a long one for the King!
Give another for the Queen and
Let the very rafters ring!
But you'll pardon me, I'm hoping,
While to some treetop I go . . .
When the coronation pictures

The New Irish Constitution

Liberal Hails Freedom Won After Centuries Of Struggle.

By Agnes E. Meyer.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

FOR MORE THAN 50 years Charles Edward Russell, noted writer and editor, has been fighting for the cause of Irish liberty. In the new Irish constitution, recently presented to the Dail Eireann by President de Valera, he sees Irish freedom at last completely achieved.

Mr. Russell, who now makes his permanent home in Washington, has made a career of fighting for the under-dog. He was born in Davenport, Iowa, in 1860, and has spent most of his life publishing newspapers and magazines, and lecturing on social questions. Now, at an advanced age, he is still throwing his great energies behind the unending struggle for freedom and justice.

"It's a glorious thing for those who have followed the cause," he told The Post, "that Ireland should at last be on the point of achieving her freedom. The constitution means absolute separation from England. In all future coronations the ceremony will have to be amended, for this is the last time that an English king will be crowned as the ruler of Great Britain, Ireland and the Empire of India. The remarkable thing is that this freedom is now to be accomplished without violence. There have been scores of attempts to put down Ireland by force and now the final victory comes peacefully.

"The history of Ireland is very romantic. It is an expression of the character of the people. For over 700 years now they have been a subject people and yet they have never been assimilated. Recently, every attempt has been made to subdue them through an economic war, but when their cattle industry was practically wiped out the farmers of Ireland simply said, 'We would rather lose our cattle than lose our case.'

"Of course the new constitution is not wholly satisfactory. Far from it. It has many serious shortcomings. The people themselves should have been given more control than they are going to get through this constitution. For example, too much power has been lodged in the hands of the President. He is to be elected for seven years and after that can be re-elected, a thing that shouldn't be. The mere fact that a president can be re-elected is the source of all sorts of political corruption. It is the course of our country and it is a pity that that same source of weakness should be continued in Ireland. In addition, the legislature has two houses and the day for two chambers has passed, for one is always a block on the other. This system has simply been inherited from medieval times, when the landowners in every country were the power behind the throne and wanted to keep control."

Criticizes Provision Regarding New Senate.

"MOREOVER," Mr. Russell went on to say, "the Senate is to be chosen by a very peculiar arrangement. Instead of representation by geography, the division of representation will be on the basis of occupation and industrial interests, and partly the Senate is to be appointed by the President. The idea of representation by material interests has merit, but I should much prefer to see a single chamber, for the delays caused by having two legislative houses can easily be used in a democracy as an excuse for dictatorship.

"The provisions made for the control of the press have been much criticized. The Constitution declares for the right of free speech and assembly, but the Government intends to prevent publication of matters that it considers seditious, slanderous, etc. The provisions are really more or less like our own and yet many people fear that they might be used to restrict the press.

"Divorce is entirely prohibited in the Constitution, a point that can also be considered reactionary, but it should not be overlooked that such a provision has many ethical and social arguments on its side. Easy divorce leads to contempt for marriage and if divorce is impossible marriages will be more thoughtfully made.

"But after all these are all minor points. The main thing is that the Irish struggle for freedom has been won. The election takes place on June 12 and the measure is sure to pass. Personally, I should of course like to see more power vested in the people, but if the Irish were going to get everything they want in this new constitution and there was nothing left to fight for, life would lose its savor."

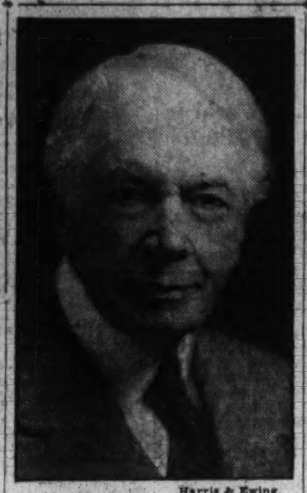
Irish Not Really A Bellicose People.

"Let me point out right here," continued Mr. Russell, "that the Irish are not at all the bellicose, quick-tempered race that they are supposed to be. They are always described as emotional, voluble and, according to Tennyson, hysterical,' but in reality, the outstanding public men in Ireland today are the coldest, least emotional statesmen to be found in any country. Most of them do not gesture when speaking, never shout or use the modern wisecrack. They just enunciate calmly what they think and cite the facts. De Valera, the president, is the calmest speaker I know and that is the prevailing style in Ireland today.

"Above all things, however, the Irish are a stubborn race as their resistance to English influence throughout the centuries indicates. Never did they wholly lose their own cultural traditions. After the extinction of the Roman Empire and through the dark ages, Ireland was one of the few spots left where scholarship was continued. Under Charlemagne, the Irish scholars were missionaries of learning throughout Europe. It is not surprising, therefore, that Ireland should now be turning to a great revival of her cultural interests."

"But what is more astonishing," said Mr. Russell, "is the economic demonstration that Ireland has made during the last five years. In addition to an amazing agricultural development, the Irish have turned to many new forms of production. They now make their own clothes and shoes. And the whole world should pay attention to their housing program. The slums in Dublin and Galway are melting away and fine new dwellings are arising to take their place.

"The passage of the housing act in 1932 marked the initiation of a plan under which it was hoped to meet the entire housing needs of the people within a period of ten years. This need was estimated in 1932 at 75,000 houses, and the progress made since the plan was initiated shows the program will be completed within the allotted time.



Harris & Ewing.

CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL

Nation Has Managed To Balance Budget.

"THE FINANCING of this housing act was very carefully thought out. Subsidies were provided by the federal government, but the local authorities were made responsible for the administration of the program.

The object was not only to provide new houses, but to provide them at low rent within the means of the poorest working class families. A condition attaching to the payment of state subsidies to local authorities is that the houses be let at rents approved by the minister. In fixing such rents, the minister generally insists that some annual contribution be required from local tax rates.

The annual charges on new houses, therefore, are met by the rent, the state subsidy, and a contribution from local taxes. In spite of this elaborate housing program Ireland is one of the few countries that has been able to balance its budget and show a surplus.

"The unemployment situation has also been handled in a singularly sane and intelligent manner. An exact census of the unemployed was taken with names and addresses. Then work was first found for what might be called the bottom layer, leaving those who had some resources to care for themselves until later. For this successful economic program De Valera deserves a large share of the credit. He is an unselfish and sincere person.

"It seems unbelievable that this race which has already shown such capacity for self-government was denied independence for many generations on the theory that it was unfit for it. It was thought that Ireland would simply become a battleground and yet the Dail has been the quietest and most efficient legislative body anywhere to be found.

Will Celebrate New Constitution.

"WE INTEND to have a big celebration in Washington after the constitution has been ratified, under the auspices of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic.

"Before the Irish Free State was established by the treaty of 1921 we had a large and enthusiastic body of Irish sympathizers in America, but after the adoption of the treaty, a great many Irish-Americans felt that now that home rule had been won this was all that Ireland could expect. These people fell off but the die-hards, of whom I am proud to say I have always been one, kept up the fight for complete freedom.

"The other group felt that an independent Ireland would leave England's flank exposed in the case of war but that is a foolish fear. If England should go into a war it would only be one between the Fascist and the democratic countries and in that case Ireland would be on the side of the democratic countries."

"It seems almost inevitable that this clash between the Fascist and the democratic will come about," continued Mr. Russell with jaws set. "In Spain, for example, I am afraid that the government may lose because the Fascist countries will go on giving their help, whereas the democratic nations are more inert. Democracy is always slow to awaken to any crisis. I remember meeting Clemenceau in Carlsbad long before the war. While discussing with him the roads to peace Clemenceau said that the spread of democracy was the world's only hope of peace because a democracy is so clumsy and so slow to act that its continued spread will mean that war will disappear.

Democracies Are Certain To Win.

"THIS CLASH between fascism and democracy is nothing but the old struggle between absolutism and the people in a new form. Formerly it was a question of the king versus the people. Now the same forces are arrayed against each other only they are in different uniforms but it is the same old struggle between concentrated power and diffused power."

"But the democratic countries will win," announced Mr. Russsell with a flinty look in his eyes, "because democracy is indestructible. Even if it should be temporarily defeated it will always come back triumphant. When the great struggle comes it will be impossible for us to keep out because the principle which is involved is the principle of our life. I am not pessimistic of the outcome because democracy must win. That is the trend of history. As Wendell Phillips once said, 'Whether in prisons or in triumphs, democracy knows nothing but victory.'

"The dictatorships will be overwhelmed and civilization will continue on its democratic way. Many of the leaders of democratic thought in Europe are despondent just at present because, as one of the most distinguished Italian intellectuals said to me recently, 'the spirit of revolt has been broken in the Fascist countries by dictatorship'. But after all democracy has seen many dark periods such as this.

"My grandfather was in the abolitionist struggle and I can remember his telling me that the period between 1850 and 1860 was very dark indeed for the abolitionists. In 1857 Emerson was led to prophecy that 'the child is not alive whose grandchild will see the abolition of slavery in America.' When John Brown was hanged the discouragement was almost universal and Victor Hugo was the only one who stated immediately 'That ends slavery in America.' And sure enough in four years it was all gone.

"The outlook may seem gloomy now but down underneath the forces of democracy are always at work. Moral truth cannot be killed. Power belongs to the people. There is no human wisdom but collective wisdom and the only basis of government is the consent of the governed. The new triumph of democracy will demand energy and sacrifice but when the democracy of the world stands opposed to fascism, we will lick the everlasting tar out of them.

"Don't forget that 100 years ago this October William Lloyd Garrison was dragged through the streets of Boston with ropes around his neck. Consider the change that has come to our country since then. How can anybody be downhearted? The stars themselves fight on our side."

"If only we have faith, Mr. Russell concluded, "nothing can stop the triumph of democracy. The progress of democracy is like an upward spiral. We pass by the same scenery time and time again, but at every turn we find ourselves on higher ground than before. Reform always comes in some guise that we don't expect—but it always comes."

Honest Stanley

By

Baldwin's Real Contribution.

STANLEY BALDWIN has made his exit from British public life at a moment when his reputation is at its very apogee. At home and abroad he is being compared with Pitt and Gladstone and Disraeli and Asquith as among the greatest statesmen produced in Great Britain during modern times.

To no small extent these fervid eulogies are, at bottom, only an invocation to the goddess of good fortune who, on more than one occasion, took "Honest Stanley" under her sheltering wing. Again and again Baldwin made blunders which, in the case of unluckier individuals, would have led to their political ruin.

The Hoare-Laval agreement regarding the Ethiopian problem is a recent case in point. It revealed Baldwin as that most helpless of all politicians, one who completely misunderstands the temper of public opinion. It also showed that for all his well-advertised high-mindedness he was not above placing expediency above principle. And his subsequent act in making Hoare the scapegoat only lowered the Prime Minister's reputation the more.

Yet while Baldwin emerged from this sorry episode with his feathers badly singed, his skin somehow remained whole. And not very many months later, at the time of the abdication crisis, he won golden opinions for his unquestioned adroitness in piloting Great Britain through a difficult constitutional crisis.

But there again luck was with him. Had Edward VII's make-up been different; had that monarch chosen to defy the Prime Minister, Baldwin might not have emerged from the episode as well as he did.

• • • •

YET IT WOULD be unfair in the extreme to attribute Baldwin's success solely to luck. The greatness of his ability as a party leader, as cabinet head, as the man at the helm of affairs in Great Britain and the empire, cannot, in the retrospect of 14 years, be questioned.

He was a comparatively unknown figure when he ascended the premiership on the death of Bonar Law. His one outstanding contribution in the field of statesmanship prior to that time had been his negotiation of the Anglo-American debt agreement. For this, in later years, he was roundly berated. Not without justice did the embittered Curzon exclaim when the premiership went to Baldwin rather than to himself that Baldwin was "not even a public figure—a man of no experience—and of the utmost insignificance."

Certainly Baldwin could advance no real claim to the leadership of the party except that he had few enemies, while the other candidates had many; that he was a commoner while the Marquess Curzon, who had real claims, was not; and that Great Britain and the Conservatives were still in a mood to crave "normalcy." At the time he was singled out for the premiership Baldwin appeared to be the British counterpart of Warren Gamaliel Harding.

• • • •

THE YEARS were to reveal how false and distorted that comparison actually was. Yet for all his real qualities of intellect, for all his broad culture, for all his political legerdemain, Baldwin remained in the public mind the very epitome of the John Bull type—simple, straightforward, ingenuous—and more than a little dull.

It is a tribute to Baldwin's political sense that he recognized the value of this illusory portrait and played up to it with assuduity. In British politics luck counts for more than mercury and Baldwin has never forgotten it. That is why Lloyd George will go down in British history as a political fluke; that is why the brilliant and talented Winston Churchill has never been able to climb to the summit.

Baldwin's dullness has always been largely assumed. And his vaunted indolence has also, from time to time, proved less real than imagined. This has certainly been the case with respect to party affairs. Again and again Baldwin has shown a marked unwillingness to put down incipient uprisings against his leadership only, at the proper moment, to reveal that he had never let the situation get out of hand. Yet he has never, even by indirection, shown any desire to act the role of dictator. With sound British sense of what is politically feasible and what is not, he consistently ruled by compromise.

TO HAVE survived at all in any position of power during these last 15 years of British history is unquestionably an achievement for which Baldwin can take full credit. And they have been turbulent years. During this period Britain has had to face a prolonged and serious depression, a general strike, a widespread rebellion against British authority in India and elsewhere in the empire, the transformation of the relations between Great Britain and the dominions, a financial crisis of great magnitude and a European situation steadily growing more desperate.

But Baldwin's chief contribution to his nation and his times does not rest with his handling of these problems. His record with regard to them is uneven. There are great failures as well as striking successes that must be charged up to him. His really notable contribution has been one of attitude. He has shown that it is possible successfully to combine conservatism with progress.

In a world of die-hards he has been a Torry who knew when and how to bend. In this he epitomized the essential political genius of his great people. Like Disraeli, he cultivated the art of stealing his opponent's thunder when it was better than his own. The Conservative Party under his leadership has moved far more slowly in the direction of making Great Britain a better place to live in than many have desired. The important fact, however, is that it has moved forward. And at a time when the world is so incessantly told that it must choose between extremes the example set by Baldwin, of a leader who can show that it is possible to avoid extremes, is of first-rate importance.

In the heyday of the Fabian movement in Great Britain, the Webbs modified the Marxian thesis of the inevitability of socialism into that of "the inevitability of gradualness." Baldwin's own attitude can be expressed by the slogan, "the gradualness of inevitability." Loaded with honors, he passes out of the cabinet into history.

Walt Whitman

By William Lyon Phelps.

His Home.

Next Monday, May 31, is the birthday of Walt Whitman, who was born in 1819, the same year with Lowell, and who died in 1892, the same year with Tennyson. As old Walt admired Tennyson and used to carry his letters in his pocket, let us hope they met somewhere before January, 1893.

The American man of letters, Harrison Morris, of Philadelphia, who knew Whitman intimately, often talked with him, and wrote an admirable book about him, was kind enough to say that he would take me to see the house in Camden, N. J., where Walt Whitman lived and died.

• • • •

Well, about a month ago I asked Mr. Morris if he would take me along, as, of course, I was eager to visit the house in his company. Accordingly, we drove across the vast bridge that separates Philadelphia and Camden, and soon we came to the house, which is now and will be in the future kept as a Whitman memorial. On the outside of the building is this plaque, the inscription on it having been written by Mr. Morris:

"Here Lived the Good Gray Poet, Walt Whitman, from 1884 to the Date of His Death March 26, 1892. This House Is Now Owned and Dedicated by the City of Camden to the Memory of Its Famous Citizen."

Inside the house Mrs. Davis kindly showed us all the interesting books and manuscripts and curios and furniture. His favorite chair by the window is eloquent of his former presence. The whole place is spotlessly clean, like the old poet himself, and I shall never forget that day, for it was doubly thrilling to be there, with Mr. Morris, who so often sat in that very room and talked with the poet. He showed me a volume of poems given to him with an autograph inscription.

The late Horace Traubel, who was Whitman's Boswell, in his three invaluable volumes, "With Walt Whitman in Camden," reported Whitman's daily conversations. Those books should most certainly be re-issued in a cheaper edition; for they will reward many thousands of readers.

President Vetoes Veterans' Bill Extending Policy Renewal Time

Believes Further Period of Grace of Little Profit to 'Individuals Concerned;' Rankin Indicates Fight to Override.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt vetoed yesterday a bill to extend the time in which World War veterans may renew their five-year war risk insurance policies.

In a message to the House Mr. Roosevelt said it was not believed that further extension of the privilege of converting the temporary war risk life insurance was "warranted or ultimately will prove profitable to the individuals concerned."

Three previous extensions were granted.

Chairman Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, of the House Veterans Committee, asked that the veto message and bill be tabled until Tuesday and indicated he would ask then that the House vote to override the veto.

Veterans' Administration officials said about 22,000 veterans were affected by the bill.

They said 578,000 veterans already had converted their temporary policies into some form of permanent life insurance.

The veterans office opposed the extension on the ground that veterans would benefit more by converting their temporary insurance into some permanent type. The temporary policies carry a somewhat lower premium than permanent forms, but have no cash or paid up insurance value, as do permanent forms.

The last five-year extension was granted in 1932.

War Risk Bill Veto Text

Text of President Roosevelt's message explaining his veto of a bill to extend renewals of veterans' war risk insurance:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 5478, "An act to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring five-year level-premium term policies for another five-year period."

The war risk insurance act which authorized the writing of life insurance by the Government for the members of the military and naval forces stated that "not later than five years after the termination of the war as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States, the term insurance shall be converted," thus clearly manifesting the intent that term insurance was to be temporary in character and of limited duration. This pronouncemeht put all applicants on notice that within five years after the declared ending of the World War it was expected that so far as Government life insurance was concerned they were to have properly planned their permanent insurance program. By amendment to the law, the five-year period was extended for one year so that on July 2, 1927, yearly renewable term insurance ceased except for a few types of cases.

The kind of insurance to which term insurance was to be converted was founded upon a mutual basis, the Government simply administering the system for the benefit of the policyholders. Premiums received on account of such insurance were for deposit in the Treasury in a trust account separated from and not commingled with the general funds of the United States.

Delay Not Warranted.

When the last date fixed for converting term policies approached, it was argued that many veterans were not then able to do so, and the law was further amended authorizing for issuance a special five-year term policy providing for automatic change to a converted form at the end of the five-year period. Subsequently, in 1932, when many of these policies expired as term insurance, it was contended that the personal affairs of some veterans were still so unsettled as not to permit them to convert the term insurance they continued to carry, and again the law was amended granting another five years' grace. The bill before me would provide for a fourth postponement.

It is not believed that any further delay in the adoption of an insurance program is warranted or ultimately will prove profitable to the individuals concerned. The lower initial premium rates on term insurance policies are beguiling, and the holders thereof should realize that the time must ultimately come when such changes, which keep ever increasing, will become so great as to compel numbers of veterans to drop their insurance when it will probably be most needed.

Furthermore, enactment of this proposed legislation would constitute a breach of faith on the part of the Federal Government toward the large body of converted policyholders contributing to the Government life insurance fund, and on two counts: (1) the small group of term insurance policyholders would continue to carry their life insurance at considerably lower premium rates than the great majority of converted policyholders are allowed; and (2) the reserves which have been built up almost entirely by the converted policyholders would continue to be drawn off to meet undue losses sustained in carrying the low-premium term policies.

It should be kept firmly in mind that the veterans of the World War expected that the Federal Government, in setting a limiting date for the conversion of term insurance into some permanent form of life insurance, would stand by its declaration. Consequently at the close of the five-year period allowed to veterans within which to convert their term insurance, 423,557 had converted to some permanent form of insurance in a total sum of $1,773,075,664. In many cases, veterans made considerable sacrifices, either reducing the amount of insurance carried or paying the increased premiums required to maintain the original temporary war insurance on a permanent lifetime basis. When legislation was subsequently enacted and re-enacted, permitting a relatively small preferred group who had not seen fit to make the same sacrifices as the converted policyholders have made, to extend their temporary insurance at the war-time low premium rates, an unwarrantable disservice was rendered to the several hundred thousand who had placed their insurance on a permanent basis.

Of the present policyholders over 85 per cent have converted their insurance to whole life or endowment forms, while the reserve which the converted policyholders have been chiefly instrumental in creating is being used to supplement the inadequate premiums paid by term insurance policyholders in order to pay the extra losses on the policies of the latter group.

Justification Doubted.

It is pertinent here to observe that at no time has the loss ratio on term policies been down to the level of the American Experience Table of Mortality according to which the premiums are computed, the most favorable year showing a loss ratio of 3.89 per cent above that table and in one year it went as high as 32.44 per cent above the table. In other words, had the accounts of the term policyholders been kept separate from those of the converted policyholders their fund for the payment of losses would now be hopelessly insolvent. In contrast to the above loss experience on term policies, the highest loss ratio on converted policies in any years was only 84.03 per cent of the expected loss under the American Experience Table of Mortality, and in one year it got down to as low as 53.52 per cent. In other words, the loss ratios on term policies range from 45 to over 100 per cent higher than those on the converted forms.

There appears to be no justification whatever for continuing to burden the converted policyholders with the excess losses of the term insurance policyholders who, under the present law, without physical examination are privileged to convert their policies to whole life or endowment forms. It, therefore, should be obvious that the remaining less than 15 per cent of the policyholders who continue to carry term insurance should now make provisions for the future by determining the amount which they can afford to pay as insurance premiums and plan accordingly.

For these reasons I am withholding my approval of this bill.

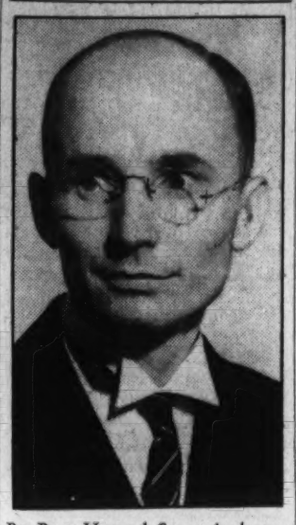
Today's Sermon



By Rev. Howard Stone Anderson,
Pastor, First Congregational Church.

"God gave us memories so that we might have roses in December!" And though Memorial Day comes to us in the month of roses, its priceless worth is apparent to us all, and we carry its fragrance and example throughout all the year.

Much of the treasure of religion is bound up in memory. We are admonished to remember our Creator in the days of our youth; to remember to give thanks to Him for his loving kindness and great mercies; to remember His righteous precepts, His care for those who follow them and His tender chastening of those who disobey. For those of us who are Christians this phase of religion reaches its highest expression as we remember Jesus Christ.

Our home life, too, is rich and beautiful because of the ministry of memory. Trysting and bethrothal days are recalled and then the high pledging of devotion "till death do us part" before the altar. All through the years that follow: the first words of the children, the care and worry, the joy and work, the hopes and fears—all things that center in the making of a home—are remembered with increasing satisfaction.

And it is appropriate that on the morrow we should decorate the graves of all our dear and holy dead: the soldiers who fought and died in whatever uniform and in whatever war, and with them, too, the graves of "all the saints who from their labors rest." For it was inevitable that the genius of Memorial Day could not be kept for one kind of soldiers or to honor only one kind of human service. In this act of remembering there is an instinct and an idealism which transcends the immediate or the particular and identifies itself with the universal and the eternal. Wherefore, let us all remember!

President Is Set To Open Drive On Tax Evaders

day before departing tonight for his Hyde Park (N. Y.) home for the week-end and holiday. He is expected to return Monday night or Tuesday.

Increase Likely.

Increasing the tax on foreign corporations is understood to be under consideration as a means of combating one type of evasion discovered.

Stressing the moral issue he said was involved, the President pictured to the press conference the passing of a tax law, in good faith, by Congress, with aid in drafting the measure from qualified experts who seek to prevent loopholes. Then, the President pointed out, some wealthy person comes along and with the help of high-priced lawyers, invents a new loophole. He asked whether that was the moral thing to do.

Tax evasions have been increasing for some 10 to 15 years, he said, although they do not relate to any particular law. During the last year there has been an acceleration in the undertakings, he said. The corporate system was one means adopted by evaders, but there are many others, the reporters were told.

Mr. Roosevelt said he wanted to make it clear such evasion pays only in the case of persons with income in the very high brackets. A very small group practices it, he said, but that group hits all other taxpayers. The very large majority of Americans, he added, file proper and ethical returns.

Doughton Comments.

Treasury officials, meanwhile, declared their investigation would be continued vigorously until all possible types of evasion have been disclosed. Just how much additional money the Government might obtain from the investigation and contemplated court actions, none would estimate.

President Roosevelt told reporters that a small amount might be obtained when corporations which have asked for extensions of time file their complete returns. They are required to pay on their estimated income at the time they file first returns on March 15.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, of the House Ways and Means Committee, expressed the belief that if wealthy Americans had "paid all the taxes the law intended to impose, I believe we would have received all or more than was estimated."

The falling off in March payments, which led to the Treasury inquiry, caused the President to revise his budget estimates, the new figures boosting the indicated deficit for this fiscal year from $2,248,000,000 to $2,557,000,000.

Possibility of a Congressional investigation of the reported invasions was seen in remarks by the President to the newspapermen, and Doughton, on Capitol Hill, expressed his willingness to co-operate. However, Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, indicated he felt the Treasury should make the inquiry, since it was in possession of all the facts.

Court Action Planned.

Morrison Shafroth, chief general counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau, has conferred frequently with Secretary Morgenthau and Undersecretary Magill on the evasion situation. He declared last night that the Government intends that all such cases "will be fought through the courts to the very end."

On March 20 he delivered an address before the American Bar Association's tax committee, in which he said:

"It has recently come to my attention that various plans of tax avoidance or evasion are being quietly advertised by laymen of one vocation or another to large taxpayers. Frequently the plan involves the formation of corporations in foreign countries or in small and obscure islands.

"In this manner we find that sometimes intelligent people have adopted these devices, paid large commissions to the propagandists and involved themselves in endless trouble with the Government."

Treasury officials said that in some of the cases disclosed civil proceedings will be undertaken, while in others fraud prosecutions will be recommended to the Department of Justice.

U. S. as Rum Maker Draws New Protest

Virgin Islands to be a white elephant of great magnitude on their hands, and they are inspired by an honest purpose to drag them out of the economic mire."

The manufacture of Government House Rum, however, has put the Virgin Islands back on a sound economic basis, Interior officials claim, with unemployment a thing of the past, and the jails empty. Besides, they say, it's darned good rum.

House members feel any such investigation would have to be very thorough. Some hold that it should include a trip to the source of the rum—the Virgin Islands—and a trip through other distilleries, in order to get a full perspective of the problem.

The House may act this week, and if it doesn't act favorably, the rush for committee assignments may resemble a mob scene, veteran House observers agree.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Notrump Technique.

Generally speaking, no-trump contracts require one technique of play, and suit contracts quite a different one. Under the protection of a trump suit losing cards can be ruffed away or side suits established, often at the declarer's leisure. At no-trump it is often necessary to pick up one trick here, another there, before relinquishing the lead. In this sense declarer's campaign might be called a "sniping attack." Consider the winning method of play in today's hand.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ A J 8 5 4 ♡ A Q 7 ◇ K 8 5 ♣ Q 4
♠ K 9 6 2 ♡ K 5 3 2 ◇ A 9 6 ♣ 10 5	North West East South	♠ 10 3 ♡ J 10 9 ◇ 10 7 2 ♣ A 9 8 3 2
	♠ Q 7 ♡ 8 6 4 ◇ Q J 4 3 ♣ K J 7 6

North	East	South	West
1 Spade	Pass	1 N T	Pass
2 spades	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

South chose to bid notrump in response to his partner's spade rather than show either of his anemic minor suits. But he had some values to spare on this bid and determined, if his partner could rebid, he would indicate them by bidding two notrump. North's spade rebid had a twofold object. If partner's hand were really weak, spades might very well be the better contract. If it were slightly stronger than the notrump indicated and South could find a rebid over two spades, a game might be in the hand. Thus, North's rebid on his shaded suit was really a "chance-giving bid."

West opened his fourth-best heart, and declarer ducked in dummy, correctly deciding that he could always take the finesse and that it would be better not to risk having the Queen smothered at this stage. East won with the nine-spot and, realizing that his partner's King was trapped anyway, could see no better return than a heart. Dummy's Queen won, and now declarer went about locating the adverse Aces.

He led a small club and, when East played low, put up the Jack. Since West would almost surely have taken this trick had he held the Ace, declarer could assume that that card was in East's hand. Now the diamond suit was attacked, declarer leading the Jack. West ducked, and a second Diamond was led toward the King. After an appreciable hesitation (which proved that the Ace was not now blank), West played the Ace. Declarer could be morally certain that he would not have made this play if he had held four diamonds because then he would have had a tenace over the remaining guarded honor in the South hand. Therefore, declarer unblocked dummy's King to insure that he could re-enter his own hand. A third lead of hearts took out dummy's Ace, and then the club Queen was laid down. East won, and returned the nine of clubs. Declarer won with the King and cashed his two good diamonds. On the latter round East discarded a club and now, purely as a safety measure, declarer led his last club.

Since East would have to win and, having no other cards but spades, would have to return a spade toward declarer and dummy's combined tenace, it did not matter whether he held the spade King or not. Declarer was sure to win two spade tricks for the success of his contract. If East had not discarded a club on the fourth diamond, declarer, of course, would have had to risk the spade finesse for the winning trick.

Yachts, Yachts and Yachts—Which of 4,000 Was Incorporated to Lower Owner's Taxes?

Yachts, yachts, yachts. Big ones and little ones, fast ones and slow ones, steam yachts, motor yachts and sailing yachts.

Four thousand of them.

And somewhere among them, its identity a complete secret outside a few official circles, is the costly pleasure ship President Roosevelt yesterday told newspapermen had been incorporated in order to reduce its owner's tax payments to the Government.

Search of Commerce Department records failed to give a definite clew to the craft the President had in mind. There was a number operated by corporations, but most of the concerns were obviously engaged in regular business—shipping, transportation or other enterprises—and plainly were not formed solely for the purpose of operating a yacht for the real owner's pleasure. Those registered in the owners' names obviously could not have been referred to by the Chief Executive.

The Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation has thousands of American yachts listed. The size of the tabulation is a surprise to the casual observer. The craft vary in size from the 27-foot, one-man crew type, to the palatial vessel more than ten times as long and carrying 72 sailors and servants. Thousands of men are employed on them in the aggregate.

Notable names are on the bureau's register.

The Corsair, 300-foot, 2,181 gross ton, world-girdling steam yacht of J. P. Morgan, is there, along with 7-ton boats of lesser folk.

Mrs. Marjorie Post Davies, wife of the American ambassador to Russia, has her 3,600-horsepower Sea Cloud, carrying a crew of 72, registered, and Edsel B. Ford lists his little Acadia, 42 horsepower, with crew of seven.

Vincent Astor's Nourmahal, on which President Roosevelt has frequently been a guest, is on the register, given as of 3,200 horsepower, and manned by 42.

George F. Baker's famous Viking, 2,600 horsepower, 1,300-ton craft, carrying 42, and W. K. Vanderbilt's Alva, with her 4,400 horsepower, crew of 45, and 2,265 tons, are given no more prominence than the 9-ton possession of a Puget Sound vacationer.

Edward L. Doheney, Los Angeles oil magnate, has his Casiana; Barron Collier, New York capitalist, lists several; Anna Dodge Dillman, of the Detroit Dodge family, has a crew of 50 on her Delphine, and A. Atwater Kent and A. Atwater Kent, jr., each record a yacht.

Solomon R. Guggenheim and his Trillora and Cornelius Vanderbilt's Winchester are on the records, with Ogden L. Mills' Avalon. Felix M. Warburg has the Carol, Marshall Field the Corisande, and Former Senator Jesse Metcalf, of Rhode Island, the Felicia, crew of 14.

Walter P. Chrysler is there with Frolic III; Mary Louise Curtis Bok, of Philadelphia, has the Lyndonia, and C. K. G. Billings the Old River.

Numerous members of the du Pont family are recorded as yacht owners—Francis V., Jesse B. and A. Felix among them.

U. A. W. Chiefs Plan New Drive For Ford Union

Strategy Parley Convened; Handbill Distribution to Be Resumed.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, May 28.—The United Automobile Workers convoked a "strategy session" tonight to plan a renewal of its riot-interrupted distribution of union literature at gates of the Ford Motor Co.

Homer Martin, U. A. W. A. president, termed "nonsense" a Ford company assertion that Wednesday's battle between unionists and Ford employes was "staged" to "cover up failure" of the union in its organizing campaign.

He met with members of the "Ford organizing committee," headed by Richard T. Frankensteen, organizational director, and Walter Reuther, West Side local president, to make arrangements for another visit by handbill carriers to the huge Ford Rouge plant in suburban Dearborn.

Among 18 Beaten Up.

Frankensteen and Reuther were among 18 persons injured as the union representatives were ejected forcibly from company property.

Duncan C. McCrea, Wayne County prosecutor, announced today he had requested Harry H. Bennett, Ford personnel director, to produce any company employes appearing in newspaper photographs of the fighting.

McCrea specifically mentioned three persons in one photograph made as the unionists were beaten and chased off a company bridge.

The prosecutor also said he was investigating the death of John H. Grierson, Ford service department employe, which Deputy Coroner Foster Knobloch said apparently was a suicide. Grierson was found shot to death at his home today, a pistol nearby.

Newspapers Blamed.

A Ford company statement on Wenesday's disorders said some newspapers it did not identify had demanded a "Ford strike story" for six months.

Martin, replying today, issued this statement:

"Ever since the attack by its agents on our organizers and members, the Ford Motor Co. has been desperately casting about for excuses to evade responsibility for the outrage in the eyes of the public.

"Company officials' first denial that service men were responsible said American Federation of Labor men did the attacking. That was changed later to loyal employes. Today they say newspapers are. We think the answer of one Detroit newspaper, 'nonsense,' is adequate."

Boston, May 28 (AP).—Written charges against the Ford Motor Co., protesting the layoff of approximately 150 workers at the company's Somerville plant, were filed tonight with the National Labor Relations Board.

Dr. A. Howard Myers, regional director of the board, said the United Automobile Workers of America, an affiliate of the Committee for Industrial Organization, filed the formal complaint.

Samuel Sandberg, New England district organizer of the C. I. O., earlier charged the men who had been employed by the Ford Co. from eight to ten years, were "discriminated against" and "coerced" in violation of the national labor relations act.

Lord Marley, one-time lord-in-waiting to King George V and at present leader of the opposition in the House of Peers, paused for a moment in the Hotel Mayflower yesterday to bite out a few terse comments on the abdication of King Edward VIII.

"Mrs. Simpson," he said, in sharp Oxonian accent, "was merely incidental. The real reasons were political. Edward had manifested a deep interest in England's welfare, in unemployment and in the depressed areas.

"The cabinet, under the leadership of Stanley Baldwin, had adopted a policy of inaction toward these problems. Quotes from statements made by Edward were hurled at them — embarrassed them."

Then he quoted from Mark Twain: "'The best king for England would be a tomcat—he would produce an abundance of heirs and could be sustained on a saucer of milk daily.'"

Asked whether he ever had met Mrs. Simpson, he replied: "No, but I have sene her with Edward—they were indeed a very happy-looking couple."

Lord Marley, politically a Laborite and professionally a soldier, went to the White House last night and with great interest watched the Virginia reel. Within the week he will leave for California, where, as he says, "I hope to be free from minorities and factory bills."

Two Policemen Suspended in School Gunfire

Charged with having fired a shot which crashed through a schoolhouse window and imbedded itself in a classroom wall, frightening the teacher and pupils, two Traffic Bureau policemen yesterday were suspended from the force by Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, assistant superintendent of police.

The men are Privates Horace E. Carantha and Robert E. Lee, both attached to the traffic cruising car. The incident which brought about their suspension occurred about 4 o'clock on the afternoon of May 4, Inspector Edwards learned from Inspector B. A. Lamb, who investigated the case.

According to information obtained by Lamb, Carantha and Lee were searching for a stolen automobile when they cornered a car in which a man, a woman and a boy were riding.

They took the trio into custody, and stopped at Second and D streets southwest at a patrol box.

As the policemen put in their call, the driver threw his car into gear and escaped. In the chase that followed they began shooting, and one of the bullets smashed a classroom window of the Bell School, on Second street, between D and E streets southwest, it is charged.

The teacher and pupils inside were frightened, Edwards learned.

As soon as the incident was reported to Superintendent of Schools Frank E. Ballou, he complained to the police and the investigation followed.

Three charges were lodged against each policeman. There were failure to make a report of a shooting, endangering the lives of citizens and making false statements to a superior officer.

Quins, on Radio, Make Birthday Cake Demands

By the United Press.

Callander, Ontario, May 28.—An estimated audience of 20,000,000 radio listeners tonight heard the Dionne quintuplets explain that you can have your birthday cake, but you can't eat it.

The world-famous quins, decked in holiday clothes, celebrated the third anniversary of their birth by broadcasting a "message" to the world which, translated by supposed experts, was:

"We want cake."

Earlier in the day five huge birthday cakes were placed on a table, but every time a quin reached toward one, a nurse said, "no." For a while it looked like a revolt, and fear was felt that the quins might retaliate by boycotting the microphone.

However, Marie, dressed in a bright yellow dress, was so eager to get her message to the world she forgot to wait for her cue, reached for the mike and nearly knocked it over.

Yvonne practically dominated the show. When the five opened the program by singing what was alleged to be the French version of "The Baby is Going to Sleep," Yvonne showed how wrong the words were by trying to shimmy up the pole.

Dr. Alan Roy Dafoe, the quints' physician, led a "radio tour" of the nursery, explaining the daily routine of the quintuplet hospital.

Wood's Widow Receives $100,000 Estate Bulk

Chambersburg, Pa., May 28.—The will of Theodore B. Wood, industrialist, disposing of an estate of an estimated value of $100,000, was filed for probate in Franklin County courts. The bulk of the estate was bequeathed to his widow, Mrs. Mary Boyd Wood.

Judge Says Girl, Not Phonograph, Was With Dancer

New York, May 28 (AP).—Mrs. Roscoe Ails was granted a divorce and $20 a week alimony from her dancer-comedian husband today despite his testimony it was only a gramophone she heard when she listened outside his hotel room door one night last February.

Ails brought the gramophone to Supreme Court with him and played the record, but Justice Samuel J. Harris was unimpressed.

The comedian said he and his stage partner, Betty Lewis, had made a recording of their act "to check up on our timing, elocution an inflection." He was in his room alone listening to the record, he said, when his wife, her brother and two aunts burst in.

Mrs. Ails testified her estranged husband's face was covered with lipstick, and her brother said he saw a girl dart into a closet when they entered.

Bob Burns Says:

I think the most ignorant men are them fellas that "knows it all." One of them kind of fellas come down home from the city one time and thought he'd be a gentleman farmer. He bought a farm he thought would be a great bargain and when the farmer told him he was sellin' it so cheap because it was overrun with sassafras sprouts, the city man laughed up his sleeve, because he thought the farmer was just lazy and didn't know his business. The city man got all the literature on Government research on sassafras sprouts and he went to work, but every time he'd dig one sprut up another one would pop up.

At the end of two years' slavin,' he had more sassafras sprouts than when he started. Finally he called on an old native and says, "How in the world can I get rid of these sassafras sprouts?"

The old native says, "'Well, brother, I've had experience with sassafras sprouts for 70 years, and the only thing I can suggest about 'em is that you learn to love 'em!"

Troubled

Farm Credit Administration employes announce that they are being troubled by solicitors, salesmen, beggars "and other persons who have no proper business in the building." The FCA Employes Bulletin discusses the matter at serious lengths, saying:

"Whatever your personal inclinations may be toward such persons, or whatever sympathy you may feel for people apparently in need, you are reminded of the fact that the presence in the building of unauthorized persons subjects us all to the risk of personal loss through thieving. You are urged to follow the suggestion that was printed sometime ago, which reads:

"'You will help in the orderly administration of our affairs and will protect yourself and your fellow employes against loss of personal property if you will do your part in keeping the building free of persons who have no legitimate business here. Whenever a solicitor, beggar or other similar person appears in an office, one employe should endeavor to hold the intruder in conversation while another employe reports his presence to the telephone operator."

The Southern Society of Washington has extended an invitation to Pennsylvanians to attend the Gov. Earle banquet, which the Southern Society is sponsoring Wednesday evening, June 2, at 7 p. m. in the ballroom of the Willard Hotel. Senator Robert R. Reynolds, of North Carolina, will be toastmaster. The address by Gov. Earle will be broadcast over a Nation-wide network. It's subject will be: "The South and Our National Problems."

Retirements

Employes of the Department of Commerce on June 1 will say goodbye to two fellow-workers, one of whom has had 50 years of service. Frank A. Loeffler, of the Patent Office, retires with 50 years 9 months and 15 day of service, and Anna M. Wilson, of the Patent Office, leaves after 30 years, 9 months and 1 day of service.

The Section of Painting and Sculpture, Procurement Division, announces that William C. Palmer, of New York City, has completed and installed two murals, oil on canvas, in the Postoffice Department Building here. These murals are in the north elevator lobby of the seventh floor.

He was born in Des Moines, Iowa, on January 20, 1906 and began the study of art in the Art Students League of New York. After working under Boardman Robinson and Kenneth Hayes Miller, he went to Europe to study fresco. There he worked under M. Baudoin in the Ecole des Beaux Arts, Fontainebleau. Upon returning to this country, he was employed by the public works art project and executed a mural for the Queens General Hospital. He has exhibited widely.

New Stamp

A commemorative postage stamp in honor of Virginia Dare, the first child of English parentage born in America, will be issued on August 18, it is announced at the office of Postmaster General Farley. The stamp will be of the 5-cent denomination. And, incidentally, what has become of the stamp clubs that once flourished so among Government employes? If still active, the clubs are very quiet. Little is ever heard of them.

That important meeting of the United Civil Service Employes comes off tonight at 8 o'clock in the Board of Trade rooms. Advance announcements simply stated that "possible affiliation with another national group of workers," and "the future organization program of civil service employes," would be discussed and acted upon. E. Claude Babcock has said that he could not amplify the original announcement.

The Farm Credit Club hikers intend to swerve their steps from Virginia, where all of their outings have been held. On June 6 they will turn to Maryland, beginning their walk at the reservoir which furnishes the water supply for the City of Frederick. This will be a circle hike, beginning along Fishing Creek, crossing the stream several times and ending with an easy trail in the Catoctin Mountains. The walk will be of approximately 5 miles. The leaders will be Joseph C. Kitt and Miss Mary Cox.

Memorial Day Services Honor Peace Heroes

'Unsung Feats' Subject of Youth Council Ceremony.

Memorial Day was observed in Washington last night with public services honoring the District's peace-time heroes, held on the plaza in front of the Public Health Building, Nineteenth street and Constitution avenue northwest.

The services, dedicated to Washington residents who sacrificed their lives in peace-time "with the quiet courage that expects no glory," were sponsored by the Washington Youth Council. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of the Washington Cathedral, and the Rev. Donald A. Maclean, of Catholic University, led the religious parts of the services.

Watson Davis, director of Science Service, a speaker at the services, acclaimed the people who "do unsung, routine, daily feats of peace." Representative H. Jerry Voorhis, of California, discussed "one of America's greatest heroes—the man who has kept his courage, his faith and his hope though he has been unemployed for a long, long time."

Honor Rolls Read.

During the ceremonies, Lieut. Walter H. Thomas, of the police department, and Battalion Chief S. T. Porter, of the fire department, read rolls of honor of the two departments, naming the members who had died in line of duty during last year.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing Post No. 23, of the American Legion, held memorial services yesterday noon, in the rotunda of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing building. James F. Kehoe, chairman, and George Landis, secretary, arranged the services. Speakers included Representatives Michael J. Stack, Pennsylvania; Charles Kramer, California; Richard M. Atkinson, Tennesee, and James M. Fitspatrick, New York; Capt. Edward F. Duff, chief of chaplains, United States Navy, delivered the invocation.

Oother Services.

Other memorial services were held in the patio of the Administration Building, Department of Agriculture, and in Cedar Hill Cemetery, sponsored by the Tank Corps Post, American Legion. Other services were held at the Washington Hebrew Congregation, 816 Eighth street, northwest, sponsored jointly by the congregation and the G. A. R. Memorial Day Corporation. Rabbi Benjamin Parker and Dr. Abram Simon led the services. The ceremonies were arranged by Dr. Bernard A. Baer, Col. Julius I. Peyser and Dr. Ivy A. Pelzman, and were participated in by several patriotic organizations.

Today more than 100 veterans' organizations will join in services to be held in Arlington Memorial Cemetery. The services will last more than an hour, and will be broadcast over all local stations. Members of the American Legion Auxiliary will distribute red poppies in the cemetery.

Cantigny Veterans Mark Anniversary

Veterans of the Battle of Cantigny gathered at the Broadmoor, 3601 Connecticut avenue northwest, to celebrate the nineteenth anniversary of the World War encounter last night. The Society of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, sponsored the banquet.

Col. Karl Truesdell, Infantry, U. S. Army, was toastmaster; other speakers were Lieut. Col. Emmanuel E. Lombard, Military Attache of the French Embassy; Lieut. Col. Frank S. Besson, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, and Gen. Hanson E. Ely, U. S. Army, retired, who discussed the battle itself.

The highlight of the program was the awarding of a sword, for excellence in military science, to Cadet Col. George E. Flather, jr., of Woodrow Wilson High School. The District of Columbia Branch of the Society of the First Division established the award four years ago "to help combat the growing trend toward pacifism among the younger generation and to promote the belief in national defense."

William McK. Clayton, chairman of the Federation of Citizens Associations Public Utilities Committee, last night girded for a new fight to restore $1 street car passes.

As an initial step Clayton will call a committee meeting to prepare for a Public Utilities Commission fare hearing scheduled within a few weeks. Calvary Baptist Will Celebrate Its 75th Year

Week of Jubilee Services Planned; Preparation Begins Tomorrow.

Calvary Baptist Church, which first opened its doors during the Civil War, will observe its seventy-fifth anniversary with a week of Diamond Jubilee exercises beginning tomorrow.

The church service tomorrow morning will be given over to preparation and dedication for the series of ceremonies that follows. The Rev. W. S. Abernethy, D. D., pastor, will officiate.

Highlights of the week include the presentation of a jubilee pageant Wednesday night, when events in the congregation's history will be reviewed. Thursday night there will be a special communion service at which the Rev. C. Oscar Johnson, D. D., pastor of Third Baptist Church in St. Louis, will be principal speaker.

The jubilee program is directed by a committee headed by Waring E. Evans, honorary chairman, and Col. Donald H. Sawyer, general chairman. Members of the committee include W. W. Everett, J. Barrett Carter, Charles H. Cooke, Dr. J. P. Leake, Dr. Wiliam Allen Wilbur, W. G. Waldo, Mrs. H. M. Kendrick, Mrs. F. A. Swartout, Mrs. G. H. Loudenslager and Mrs. G. N. Dagger.

The first building, erected in 1862 at a cost of $110,000, was destroyed by fire in December, 1867. A new edifice was completed in 1869. That building, with several large additions, serves the parish today.

First permanent pastor was the Rev. Thomas R. Howlett, who commenced his ministry in 1869. Succeeding pastors included the Rev. J. W. Parker, the Rev. F. A. Mason and Dr. Samuel H. Greene. Dr. Abernethy, the present minister, has been with the church since 1920.

Dr. Oliver Hart Studies Transfer

Dr. Oliver Hart, pastor of St. John's Episcopal Church here, announced yesterday he would tell his congregation at the 11 o'clock service tomorrow morning whether he had decided to accept the post of coadjutor of Tennessee.

He received official notification yesterday of the assignment, which would transfer him to Tennessee. The committee, headed by Dr. E. P. Vanbridge, of Nashville, informed Dr. Hart of its choice when i arrived in Washington.

D. C. Groups Seek Higher Relief Fund

Social Workers Clash With Commercial Organization.

Demands that the District appropriation for unemployment relief be raised substantially and be kept at the House or Budget Bureau figures were made yesterday upon the Senate sub-committee handling the 1938 supply bill.

Social welfare organization spokesmen clashed with representatives of business interests as the sub-committee was flooded with statistics pro and con on the state of the unemployment in the National Capital.

Senator Thomas, chairman of the sub-committee, declined to predict what the action of his group will be, pending further hearings next week, but it is believed that no additional appropriations will be allowed before next year.

$1,600.000 for 7 Months.

The attitude of some members of the sub-committee is that the $1,600,000 voted by the House is at least sufficient until next January. If at that time the fund is nearly exhausted a deficiency estimate could be submitted, it was pointed out.

Pleas for increases in the unemployment relief item ranged from $1,000,000 to $5,700,000. Speakers urged that provision be made for unemployed employables, now barred from relief, and that a higher standard of living be allowed the relief recipients than is now possible with the present dole.

The Washington Board of Trade submitted an extensive brief and voiced opposition to any increase in the relief appropriation. Robert S. Cottrell, executive secretary, stated that the increase in employment in the Capital in 1934-35 was 25 per cent for private industry and 58 per cent in the Government service, whereas the population growth was only 9 per cent.

Cottrell said that public aid for all purposes had jumped from $2,000,000 a year to $20,000,000 during the last 20 years.

The major arguments for a larger appropriation were made by Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, chairman of the District Committee on Employment; William A. Roberts and W. S. Ufford, of the Monday Evening Club; Leifur Magnusson, of the advisory committee to the Public Assistance Division, and spokesmen for the Workers Alliance.

Roberts indorsed the proposal that the appropriation be increased by $1,000,000 and urged the Senate subcommittee to eliminate a provision restricting expenditures of the Public Assistance Division for personnel to 10 per cent of the total.

He asked further that provision be made to care for the unemployed employables.

Playground Protest.

Ufford also registered the opposition of the Monday Evening Club to the House transfer of playgrounds from the District Playground Department to the Community Center Department.

Magnusson made a plea for the old-age pensioners. He said that up to 1,000 pensioners will be added this year to the 2,373 now on the rolls and that this will necessitate an additionl $360,000, of which the District must pay half and the Social Security Board half.

Rufus Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers League, cited figures comparing the relief load in Washington as compared with Baltimore in a plea that the appropriation not be increased. He also asked that none of the House appropriations for other needs be raised.

At the morning session the subcommittee heard considerable testimony on designs for a new Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge. At the conclusion, however, Senator Thomas said that there is such a divergence of opinion that it is likely that the whole matter will be deferred another year and a new study be ordered.

A plea for money for a Woodrow Wilson High School stadium was made by a group headed by Mrs. Leslie B. Wright, of the Woodrow Wilson Home and School Association. Mrs. Wright also asked $23,000 for completion of the Alice Deal Junior High School.

13 Proves a Lucky Number For Capital in Irish Sweeps

That Many Washingtonians Are Favored in Draw for English Derby; 3 Get Starters, Have Chance for $150,000 Wednesday.

Sparks from the wheels of fortune ignited the dreams of 13 persons in this region yesterday as giant drums containing millions of numbers in the Irish Hospital Sweepstakes flung out the names of lucky ticket-holders.

Three of the luckiest in Washington drew starters in the English Derby, to be run Wednesday. They may win as much as $150,000 if their horses come in. The other ten drew nonstarters, but are assured of at least $2,333.35 consolation prize.

Floyd E. Rush, managing director of the Washington Hotel, drew the horse Ingleside. Henry Vincent Egan, electrician at the City Postoffice, drew the horse Frank Hals. Thomas Acheson, an engraver at a morning newspaper, drew the horse Battle Royal. All three of these horses are starters, but none is a favorite Woman of 89 Wins.

Mrs. Eleden, who lives at 1933 First street northeast, doesn't know what she'll do with her $2,333.35, but she's sure she won't go to Europe.

Others like Mrs. Edelen who drew non-starters were as joyous as those who drew starters. They were Walter Skinner, a groundskeeper at St. Elizabeths Hospital; Frances D. Naquin, of 2507 Lynn street, Arlington; "Wild Fire," of 3500 Fourteenth street; "Skinny," of 1035 B street southeast (there is no such address); J. B. Townsend, 1815 Washington avenue, St. Josephs, Md.; "Mike," R. F. D. No. 2, Glen Arm, Md.; "Sammie," 80 Fifty-third place southeast, and Louise Duncan, Washington.

Offered $10,000.

Egan, the electrician, came out from a hole beneath the Postoffice where he was installing machinery and said:

"Personally, I never bought a ticket myself. My wife has been buying them ever since they started running the Sweeps. Yup, my wife bought this ticket, but I paid for it. It's my money. But she's still got the ticket. She's got another in her own name. She can have that one. I was wired an offer of $10,000 from a broker in New York for a half-share, but I'm holding out for higher bids." Egan's father came from Kilkenny, Ireland.

Acheson, the engraver, who rooms at the Club Embassy, has been trying to win for years, too. He also has received an offer for part or all of his ticket on Battle Royal, but won't sell—"at least, not all of it." He said he played a hunch and put his father's name, Alex, on his ticket because his father came from Dublin. His plans are indefinite.

627 Americans Win.

Dublin, Irish Free State, May 28 (AP).—"A Big Punk" from New York, "David" of San Francisco, and 625 other Americans or syndicates of Americans were in the money today.

Americans drew about half the 1,248 lucky tickets today in the Irish Hospitals Sweepstakes on the English Derby.

Each of the 627 ticket holders will receive a minimum of $2,330, regardless of the outcome of the race, thus sending at least $1,640,910 to the United States.

Tomorrow 1,600 consolation prizes of about $500 each and 10 residual prizes of about $31,270 each will be drawn, so other hundreds of Americans who gambled $2.50 each on a ticket can cross their fingers and keen on hoping.

Thirty-two of the tickets on the first five favorites to win the race Wednesday are held by Americans. Those who hold tickets on the winning horse will get $150,000 each. For the second place horse, $75,000 is the prize, and for the third place horse, $50,000.

The District department of the American Federation of Government Employes last night by resolution formally disapproved the plans for a mass meeting in protest of the governmental economy measures as has been proposed by seven A. F. G. E. lodges which have organized themselves as the "Committee Against False Economy."

The department went on record as disavowing and disapproving any action from its membership which has not the sanction of the national headquarters, through its president, Charles I. Stengle, has issued a cease and desist order against activities of the Committee Against False Economy and particularly has frowned on the proposals for a public meeting.

Hooe to Fight 'Resignation' From Office

Indicates He Will Retain Position as Chief of Prosecutors.

2 Others in Corporation Counsel's Bureau to Resign.

Rice Hooe, assistant corporation counsel, whose forthcoming resignation was announced at the District Building Thursday, has indicated he will not give up his post as chief of Police Court prosecutors, it was learned last night.

Hooe's resignation, together with similar decisions by two other assistant prosecutors, was announced by Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal.

Yesterday, however, Hooe reportedly told courthouse attaches he would fight any attempts to "force" his resignation. His only comment to questions was:

"Published accounts of my scheduled resignation did not come from me."

Inquiry Made Recently.

Rumors of a reorganization in the Police Court corporation counsel's office have prevailed for several weeks. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen recently ordered an investigation of reported laxity and irregularities in handling traffic court prosecutions.

Apparently confident that Hooe will submit his resignation within a few days, Corporation Counsel Seal said yesterday he was undecided as to his successor.

"I expect to have Mr. Hooe's resignation soon—although it is not in my hands at the moment," Seal added.

Prominently mentioned to fill the post is George D. Neilson, youthful assistant, who was appointed four years ago by former Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman.

Friction Exists.

Friction reportedly exists between the Police Department and the assistant corporation counsel's office. Policemen frequently have complained that charges against accused motorists have been reduced in order to assure conviction with a minimum of effort.

Neilson has been indorsed for the position by numerous local officials, among them Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer and Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown.

In addition to his Police Court work, Neilson has handled the legal work in connection ith personal property taxation in the District. He has been a resident of Washington for eight years.

Besides Hooe, other scheduled resignations announced by Seal were Hinman D. Folsom, in charge of public utilities, and Raymond Sparks, taxation expert. Both plan to enter private law practice, it was reported.

Liquor License Power Broadened

The District Commissioners yesterday gave the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board power to license liquor stores near churches, schools or colleges.

The board had asked the Commissioners to allow it discretionary power in licensing Class A stores near churches. Their request had been vigorously opposed by the Washington Federation of Churches and the Federation of Citizens Associations.

A. R. Hester, 1824 Rhode Island avenue, captured the sweepstakes prize of the annual spring flower show of the Woodridge Garden Club, held last night at the Woodridge Presbyterian Church hall. Mr. Hester also exhibited the best peony in the show. Mrs. M. H. Sutton and George Targett took second and third prizes, respectively, in the peony class. The show was admirably staged under the direction of a committee headed by Mrs. Sutton.

Presentation of Medals to Merrill and Lambie For Epochal Flight Tops National Aviation Day

Leading the way as America observed its first National Aviation Day, the Army and Navy Union last night presented medals to Richard Merrill and John Lambie, first fliers in history to complete a round-trip flight over the Atlantic.

Both civil and military officials in aviation circles spoke at the presentation banquet in the Willard Hotel, and lauded the courage of the two argonauts of the air.

Merrill received the pilot's medal of the Union and Lambie the Navigation Decoration. The national senior vice commander of the Army and Navy Union, C. J. Russell, made the presentation to Merrill, while Lambie received his award from H. C. Baker, of the Military Order of the Firing Squad.

Aviation leaders who spoke included Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, of California; Representative Joseph Shanley, of Connecticut; Bud Gearhart, of California; William Citron, of Connecticut; Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, chief of the Army Air Service; Capt. A. C. Reed, assistant chief of the Naval Air Service; Col. Ross E. Rawell, chief of the Marine Corps Air Service; Capt. L. T. Chalker, head of the Coast Guard fliers; Col. Clarence Tinker, chief of the National Guard flying arm.

As America observed the day, leaders of military and civil aviation everywhere took stock of the Nation's flying resources.

They found the Army had 902 combat, transport and training planes in service, exclusive of obsolete craft still being utilized; 742 more already contracted for and an objective of 2,300 planes set for 1939.

The Navy had 954 combat planes, many of them long-range patrol ships, in service; 800 more contracted for; objective of 1,910 planes by 1939.

There were 7,537 commercial and private planes licensed for operation by the Air Commerce Bureau as of May 1.

In an Aviation Day statement, Gen. Malin Craig, Army Chief of Staff, said the combined airplane strength of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps soon would exceed 3,000.

Virginia Reel Danced At White House Party

President Calls Figures to 'Turkey in the Straw' as First Lady and Others Trip the Measures; Capital Journalists Are Guests.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

A wish came true for Mrs. Roosevelt last evening when she and the President entertained members of the Fourth Estate at the White House. Ever since she has been First Lady, she has wanted to see the Virginia Reel danced in the East Room.

Last evening it was done to a turn by the First Lady herself and a practiced corps of costumed dancers who swung their partners right and left, bowed quaintly, marched, galloped and stepped, as the President called the figures and a fiddle played "Turkey in the Straw."

Ladies and gentlemen in attire of a bygone era divided into groups, took their places at opposite ends of the East Room and awaited a signal from the President, shortly after he and Mrs. Roosevelt finished greeting hundreds of men and women of the press and their escorts.

Colonial Styles.

As the long line filed by to shake hands with Mrs. Roosevelt, who with Mrs. John Nance Garner by her side received in the lobby, and with the President and Vice President in the East Room, there was seen—here and there—a scattering of men and women dressed in attire that would have been fashionable in the early nineteenth century. They looked as though they might have lived in the days of Thomas Jefferson, when colonial styles were giving way to the empire fashion, and the lively American country dance—the Virginia reel—was the feature of almost every social gathering.

In contrast to Mrs. Garner, who wore a gown of white chiffon cut on simple lines in the most up-to-date mode, Mrs. Roosevelt wore a frock of flowered dimity, fashioned with a tight bodice, a square neck and a long, full skirt trimmed in tiers of ruffles. In keeping with her dress, her hair was drawn in a high knot and bound with a narrow blue satin ribbon.

The nine other women who took part in the quaint dance were similarly attired. All wore pastel empire frocks replete with frills and furbelows, and set off with puff sleeves, square necks and snug bodices. To complete the picture, their partners wore knee breeches, cutaway coats with standing military collars, and lace ruchings at wrists and neck.

Audience Applauds.

"Ladies cross over!" shouted the President, and the two groups increased their pace as the order was carried out. A ripple of approval swept through the audience and a burst of aplause followed. The dance continued until the First Lady's wish had been fulfilled to the delight of both the participants and the other guests.

The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Morgenthau, Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, the hostess' brother—Mr. Hall Roosevelt, who was her partner—and Mr. Marvin McIntyre were among those who proved they were past masters at the Virginia Reel. Others who cut its fancy figures in a lively fashion were Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Essary, Mr. and Mrs. Ulric Bell, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Hayden, Mr. and Mrs. James Lloyd Wright, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lindley, Mrs. Malvina Scheider and Mr. H. A. Osthagen.

Meanwhile, some of those who watched at first decided to try a bit of Virginia "reeling" on their own. And soon the East Room was filled with dancers, swinging their partners right and left, bowing and "crossing over," while the orchestra played a series of such familiar airs as "Dixie," "Yankee Doodle," "Way Down Upon the Swanee River," "Pop Goes the Weasel" and "Anchors Aweigh." Persons on the sidelines pushed in closer, patting their hands to the music. The stiffest of stiff shirts softened as the spirit of the old-fashioned dance and familiar tunes took possession of the crowd. The Virginia reel might have gone on forever, if the original dancers had not decided to call it a day—or rather a dance—and Mrs. Roosevelt gave a signal to the orchestra to stop. Presently, persons who had been swinging their partners right and left were wheeling around on the floor with modern steps while the band struck up the most modern tunes in its repertoire.

President Has Fun.

The President, sitting throughout the evening in the chair he occupied as he greeted the guests, seemed to have as good a time as anybody, and everyone seemed to be having the time of his life. For guests who preferred other types of merrymaking than dancing or watching others dance, there was plenty to do. The Red Room, the Blue Room, the South Portico and the East Portico were filled with guests who collected in groups to chat. The south lawn, lighted with a string of Japanese lanterns, was another popular meeting place. But most popular of all was the table in the lobby where beer flowed freely throughout the evening.

Other features of the party were dance numbers by Miss Roberta Jonay, of New York, and a number of selections by Mat Windsor's gypsy chorus and orchestra. Later, guests found their way to the state dining room for a buffet supper.

Nearly 800 Attend.

From first to last, it was a gay party—the fourth in a series the President and Mrs. Roosevelt have given for members of the press. A crowd estimated at close to 800 came early and stayed late.

The guest list allegedly was limited to journalists and their escorts from the White House Correspondents Association, the Gridiron Club, the Women's National Press Club and the Newspaper Women's Club, members of Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference, the White House News Photographers Association and the White House staff.

Among others there were the Secretary of War and Mrs. Woodring, the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Claude Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy; Mrs. Benton McMillin, of the Civil Service Commission; Mr. and Mrs. John Farr Simmons, and Mrs. Isabella Greenway, former Representative from New Mexico.

Club's Party For Children Goes on Air

Wooden-Shoe Dance on Program; Orchestra Will Play.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Songs, recitations and a wooden shoe dance will be heard over a national broadcast this afternoon from the Congressional Club. Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Jed Johnson, the club is entertaining at its annual children's party and the broadcast of the program by the boys and girls will be a feature of the occasion.

The party will be from 3:30 to 5:30, with the radio program between 4:30 and 5. Mrs. Daniel A. Reed, president of the club, will speak briefly, there will be a short number by the Marine Band Orchestra and then the children will "have the air." Miss Terrelita Maverick, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Maury Maverick, will sing a medley of songs of the Lone Star State: "The Eyes of Texas," "On the Alamo" and "San Antonio." Miss Mary Louise Hook, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Frank E. Hook, will give two readings; the Misses Wilburta and Doralyn Cartwright, daughters of Representative and Mrs. Wilburn Cartwright, will sing a duet and also will present a wooden shoe dance, the clump, clump of which will be heard by the radio audience.

Next on the program will be Miss Jedolyn Jean Johnson, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Johnson, who, in a quaint colonial costume, will give a reading to the music of the Bethoven Minuet. Ralph Church, jr., son of Representative and Mrs. Church, will play an accordion solo; Miss Annie Laurie Rankin, daughter of Representative and Mrs. John E. Rankin, a piano solo; J. Hardin Peterson, jr., son of Representative and Mrs. Peterson, will recite "Seein' Things;" Miss Gene Cox, daughter of Representative and Mrs. E. E. Cox; Miss Virginia Garrett, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Clyde L. Garrett; Miss Joan Johnson and Miss Edwina Pou Wadden will each sing, and Miss Mary Gwynne, daughter of Representative and Mrs. John Gwynne and Miss Sarah Garrett each will give readings.

The program will be announced as the "Congressional Children's Frolic," and will be broadcast over WMAL with "Bud" Ward, as master of ceremonies.

Mrs. Johnson is being assisted in preparations for the party by Mrs. Peterson, Mrs. Will Rogers, Mrs. Rankin, Mrs. Gwynne, Mrs. Samuel W. King, wife of the Delegate from Hawaii, and Mrs. Guy Gillette, wife of Senator Gillette.

A performance by Grease Ball, a trick dog, will be another feature of the afternoon.

MEMBERS of the Capital Society, Children of the American Revolution, will present a minuet at the annual garden party of the Housekeepers Alliance, at which Mrs. Henry S. Sawtelle will be hostess, June 15. Thereby hangs a tale——

Mrs. Sawtelle has been president of the Capital Society for about 20 years—ever since it was organized—and it is the oldest in the United States. One of its featured activities is the minuet. All of the children learn to dance it and they are in demand on many occasions for entertainments, both in the District and outside. They have even been invited this spring to appear in New York City and in New Orleans. Only eight, of course, present the minuet, but the group may be any 8 of the 125 members. Mrs. Sawtelle's son, now a law student, has been doing the minuet in patriotic programs ever since he was 4.

MRS. NETTIE MAE BURGESS, a member of the Wildflower Preservation Society of Maryland and of the Brookmont Garden Club, is an authority on wildflowers which grow in this section. Dressed in knickers, when she is not devoting herself to her real estate business, she is tramping through the woods in search of plants. I've even been told that when she finds a client who shares her interest in flowers she almost forgets it is houses she is showing.

The outside course of jumps has been newly painted in bright colors, seats on the side of the hill in the shade of the grove of locust trees have been installed for spectators and a new bridge across the stream has been constructed. Johnson, chief of remount service, U. S. Army; Maj. Henry Leonard, U. S. Marine Corps, retired; Mr. Sterling Larrabee, master, Old Dominion Hounds, and Mr. Harry Semmes.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

When Fencing Teacher Gives Free Lessons to Girl Who Interests Him, Should She Repay With Gift?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would like to know whether it would be improper to give my fencing master a gift? He leaves soon for camp duty after having taught during the past winter at a local college. He is married but separated from his wife. He refused to take money in payment for instruction because first he wishes to preserve his amateur status as a fencer and, second, because of his friendly interest in me.

• • • •

Our relations have been strictly business like and I would like to do something to show him how sincerely I appreciate his efforts to develop me into a fencer and a normal, well-balanced human being. I have about $10 to spend. Please advise me as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

GRATEFUL GIRL.

DEAR GRATEFUL GIRL: Since the man is married and you don't know his wife; since your dealings have been strictly business-like; and since his contribution to your social development and special skill at fencing was prompted by unself seeking kindliness, I think it might be best to express your gratitude and appreciation only through the spoken word. After all, it is the essence of graciousness at times to be content to remain someone's debtor; not to try to pay off a kindness with a gift which represents cash in another form. As a matter of fact, you might be subtracting from what inward satisfaction and pleasure the man experienced in tutoring you, if you were to make him a substantial gift.

M. H.

Girl's Heart Problem.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Three years ago, as a carefree young girl of 17, I met and continued to see a young man three years my senior. We had at least four dates a week and sometimes more. He had a road construction job at first, and later worked on a farm. Then I found him a better job, at better wages, in town. At first things were fine. Now they are terrible. His hours got longer and longer and he started drinking, encouraged by some of the people he worked with.

• • • •

He would be so tired when he came to see me that he could hardly stay awake. His visits grew less frequent. Then one Sunday he was to drive his employer and the latter's wife to Washington. And although they knew I am his steady girl, they brought another girl along. Now every time they get a chance they throw this girl at his head. I'm so worried I can't eat or sleep as I should

• • • •

Before this happened, he had asked me to marry him but that was out of the question until he was making more money. Once recently, while under the influence of alcohol, he said he didn't love me; but when he isn't drinking he seems as devoted as ever. I love him so very much, and we have shared so many joys and sorrows together that I can't bear to see him throw his life away.

• • • •

I have thought of going away to forget but mother is sickly and I am needed at home. There are no other young men I could go with. They are either married or going regularly with other girls. Please tell me how I can straighten him out and get him away from these destructive influences.

HEARTSICK.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR HEARTSICK: The most futile occupation in the world is that of attempting to play the role of moral policeman in another person's private life. It is almost impossible to protect a person from his own inherent weakness. Your young man's character is far more at fault than his environment, his associates or his workaday conditions. The fact that he was sober, dependable and devoted until he started working in town, probably means only that he had hitherto been denied opportunity for indulging less admirable inclinations.

• • • •

Your only hope of "straightening out" this boy is by laying down the law to him in no uncertain terms. Tell him you haven't the faintest intention of marrying a man who drinks heavily; whose devotion isn't dependable, and who is so dishonest with himself and others that he places responsibility for his shortcomings at other persons' doors. If you give him to understand that he must "straighten up" and begin at once to act as he did when you first knew him—before he got the job in town—or else your friendship is ended, he may make a real effort to do so. But if he thinks he can go on doing as he pleases, coming to see you when he chooses; and that all you are going to do about it is put up with it, while lamenting it, he won't see any necessity for getting hold of himself.

• • • •

It is unfortunate there are no other nice young men you could go out with. If you were to go out with some boy who had all the virtues which he has recently forsworn, I think the effect upon him would be most salutory. However, since your future happiness is at stake—or so you now believe—you must summon the courage to refuse to see him unless he reforms, even though it means you will be very lonely in doing so.

Sunday's Problem.

For eight years, girl has been courted by man her own age who is hemmed in by family cares and a possessive mother. She loves him desperately, but he does not propose and speaks of marriage disparagingly. "What should I do? It would almost kill me to give him up," she writes. Her problem will be considered here Sunday.

College Girls Held More Romantically Inclined Than Ever

White Plains, N. Y.—In contrast to the recent statement of a prominent college president that masculine interests are growing more coldly scientific, Dr. Anna Mary Keenan, professor of creative writing at Good Counsel College, in White Plains, N. Y., reports that college girls are more romantically inclined than ever.

While educators of men are growing alarmed at the swing of the male species from the romantic arts to the sciences, this professor at Good Counsel College finds there has been a steady increase at the White Plains women's college in registration in arts and romantic courses.

"The romantic instincts of the feminine nature," she says, "continue to survive the onslaught of scientific thought." Contrary to the prevalent opinion that youth of today is mechanical-minded and preoccupied with "practical" courses, Dr. Keenan finds that sensitive, creative, artistic courses still have the strongest appeal for her feminine students. She believes this is a healthy sign, feeling that more than they need scientific study, "today's children" require the impetus which a creative course inspires.

"The students of today, so unimpressed with the everyday miracle of the machine, are swinging back to pursuits which exercise their artistic imaginations and which leave scope for their own ideas and interests," says Dr. Keenan.

Yellow for Blondes, Advises Actress

Stage Star Upsets Traditions In Achieving Unusual Effects

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

BLONDES, contrary to general opinion, can wear yellow, believes Violet Heming, noted actress and acclaimed one of the best-dressed women of the stage. Not only is yellow Miss Heming's favorite color, but she has a theater superstition about it. "Whenever I wear either an entire costume or an accent in yellow," said this fashion authority, "the play I am working in is always a success. Green seems to work just the opposite and brings me bad luck, consequently I never wear any shade of green"

To be smartly groomed, Miss Heming maintains, means that a woman should study her wardrobe and buy frocks, suits and accessories with great discrimination. The effect when wearing clothes of any type, however, she advises, should never look studied—neither should the wearer be apparently conscious of what she is wearing. "If you plan your wardrobe well and use good judgment in your costume ensembling, knowing that your frock suits the occasion, you can develop poise and nonchalance," she pointed out.

Prefers Sports Clothes.

Miss Heming is very fond of sports clothes and wears them whenever the occasion will permit. When interviewed backstage in New York recently, where she is a star in "Yes, My Darling Daughter," she was wearing slacks and a sports shirt. "I practically live in slacks in the summer," Miss Heming said, "as I sail my own boat and spend every available minute I can in the water. I like to swim, too, but not in taffeta and the like—the less clothes you wear when swimming the better."

No woman should wear slacks or lounging pajamas that do not touch the floor, Miss Heming contends—it gives an ungainly appearance to any figure.

The small amount of clothes that women of today wear is not only more healthful than the voluminous array of skirts and whatnot of yesteryear, Miss Heming thinks, but it is an incentive for women to take better care of their figures.

"I would like to see corsets fade out of the fashion picture entirely," she exclaimed with emphasis. "If you carry yourself well and have good posture, you generally do not need the support of a corset"

Antique jewelry is a hobby of this actress style expert and she has one of the finest collections of amethysts in the country.

"I love jewelry; not the kind sponsored by designers and fashion authorities," Miss Heming said, "but odd and unique old pieces that very few women would notice. My extravagance is accessories—they have a special way of reflecting something that is definitely a part of one's personality—I think they are of paramount importance when planning any ensemble."

Becomingness Versus Chic.

"Never wear a costume that is not becoming, regardless of the current mode or the smartness of the garment, and never buy cheap clothes," advises this "best-dressed woman. One well-made suit and frock, of good material, will wear indefinitely, Miss Heming maintains, and it gives a self-assurance that cheap and gaudy clothes can never attain.

"I have a black evening gown I have worn for several seasons and will continue wearing it because it is smart, becoming and I like it. The fact that the same persons have seen it on me numerous times does not feaze me at all—that is a wrong idea which so many women have (not wanting to be seen in the same costume more than once)."

Miss Heming was born in England and started her stage career at the age of 12, appearing in Peter Pan. One of the most delightful memories of her long career in the theater, she said, was when she appeared with the old Columbia Stock Company here in Washington.

Intrusiveness Is One of Worst Social Errors

By Margaret Wallace.

"I am very much in need of advice," a young Washington woman writes. "I have a very close friend of whom I am very fond. But she has a bad habit of asking me personal questions. Not only does she ask these questions when we are alone together, but she will ask them when we are with other friends.

"When I protested she said it was just interest in me and that she asked me about my affairs when other people were present because she knew that I never did anything I was ashamed of and that I made no pretense of being richer and more important than I am. All this may be perfectly true, but I object to her asking me about my salary and if I got a raise and how much I pay for my apartment. She also asked me how much I was able to send home to my mother and volunteered the opinion that since my parents had a nice farm she thought that they should not take my money. She suggested that since I had a brother he should bear the burden. She asked me if he drank and if he intended to get married. I have always been taught that such personal questions were very rude."

There is no doubt that this young girl is violating all the tenets of good form in asking such questions of her friend, and especially in public. A true friend may listen to confidences on financial and personal matters and will even discuss the questions of cost of apartments and other details, and give advice. But it is a different matter when a series of personal questions is asked out of curiosity.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, May 28.

IF YOU WILL kindly step into our Grand Central Depot tomorrow morning, it being the day of rest, you will probably be bounced right out of your stylish toeless shoes by the loud tootling of a leetle Bavarian band. It will be playing to hail the departure of the weekly "falt-boot" train for the wild rapids of the noble Housatonic River in nearby Connecticut.

ALICE HUGHES.

Now, following the ski trains and the bicycle trains, it's the "falt-boot" train which is "all the go" among the younger sportin' crowd. This aquatic contraption, a "folding boat" auf Englisch, is a cross betwen the Eskimo kayak and our own canoe, borrowed from the first Americans. Folded, it's not much bigger than a golf bag. In a few minutes it can be assembled into a river-worthy paddle boat. Away you go, and if you don't tip over, you're luckier than most!

I saw about 200 boys and girls start for the rampaging Housatonic last Sunday, slightly fearful, but game to the marrow. The train lets 'em off at Falls Village, where the boats are assembled. They then scoot 17 miles downstream, through a very nice set of bumpy rapids, and the train picks them up again and dumps them back on Forty-second street, burned, tired and damp around the edges. But the girls say it's a thrilling sport, and who am I to dispute their eager words? I'm delighted with the growing "fold-boat" mania. It's just another thing I don't have to do, and we can't have too many of them in this frantic, over-crowded world! It's nice to know that while the young folks are coping with mid-stream boulders I'll be reading the Sunday supplements!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—A thunderstorm r'ared up while our gold-plated ladies were browsing at the classy Colony Restaurant last week. Through the dining room tore Mrs. Henry Gassaway Davis 3d. She darted into the checkroom and folded her pup, Hector, in her arms. "When it's loud, Hector shakes all over and nearly dies!" Mrs. Davis explained. But Hector was soothed, and when the sun came out he resumed his cheerful chewing of the customers' overshoes. Ah, the troubles of the very rich! . . .

Of all the year's book titles, I pick that chosen by Mme. Frances Alda, ex-canary of the Met, for her memoirs. "Men, Women and Tenors." Isn't that a honey? Of course, a few of the High-C boys may decide to sue. . . .

The greatest of local house-furnishing emporia is now telling customers what to do with those old rusty amber beer bottles that cluster 'round the refrigerator. Seems if you cut off the bottoms and place them in candle-holder bases of hammered copper, they make right smart lamps to decorate the home. On the other hand, I know where you can get a nickel for them . . .

The city managed to stay fairly calm the other day when Miss Dorothy Yule arrived on the Berengaria with her mamma, Lady Yule, who did not invent Christmas. Dot is England's Doris Duke, or "the richest girl in the world." Lady Yule is already known to fame as the woman who rented the yacht Nahlin to Edward Windsor last summer for his Adriatic holiday, on which were taken snapshots of Wallis and himself which broke the royal romance in newspapers all over the world—save in England itself.

I hear that our local Society for the Suppression of Vice, invented by the late Anthony Comstock, seized five tons of naughty books and other items in 1936. In spite of this furious onslaught on printed wickedness, Gotham continues pretty middling evil.

Style wiseacres here are advising girls who cannot afford city and country wardrobes to invest in dark linen dresses and suits—good double-duty duds which can be worn both in town and on those exhausting week-end house parties. Black linen garments of this type are especially smart this year, and they give bright accessories a chance. A new dark green, called pomegranate, is also in high favor. Very sound and fruity advice, I aver, or opine.

Shorter, Fuller Skirts Now Shown by Chanel

Series of small pockets trim the tailored clothes, and there are many touches of bright red throughout the entire collection.

1937 Model Bride Lists $30 Salary, Love as Necessary

The June bride, 1937 model, is a practical young woman who believes that $30 a week as well as love is necessary before embarking on marriage. She also wants a home, children, vacations by herself once in a while, and wants to cook well.

This composite picture of what the current bride wants is set forth by Gretta Palmer in June Good Housekeeping, compiled from the answers to hundreds of questionnaires sent to prospective brides in every part of this country, ranging from 17 to 40 years of age.

"Some girls in smaller cities and towns think that $1,200 a year is enough for a courageous couple to embark on," Mrs. Palmer says. "Girls from larger cities place the figure a little higher, in most instances. Only a few of the brides from well-to-do sections of the larger cities place the figure as high as $50 a week, although a few mention $4,500 as the minimum. Strangely enough, the girls who demand a high income from the husband are the ones who plan to earn more money themselves in jobs outside the home.

'Less than a tenth of the brides plan to keep jobs outside the home from choice. Those who are going to work believe that they will need the money. Less than half the girls will share a joint account with their husbands. Instead, this year's brides expect to get an allowance.

Slip Covers Work Miracles

MIRACLE-WORKERS! That's what trim, smooth slip covers are. Make them easily yourself and, behold, you've a brand new living-room.

The only hard task is selecting from the bewildering array of lovely fabrics. If you can't narrow your choice to one fabric, why not choose two or more? It's smart to have variety in slip covers.

For your sofa try cretonne in a huge floral print of plum, rose, gold and green for the back and seat sections, and plain green crash for the arms, apron, outside back and flounce. The chair can be made to harmonize in an all-over shell pattern of cotton brocade in plum and beige.

If you can make a house dress, running up slip covers will be pie for you. Getting a perfect fit is simple if you know the bright little trick of professional upholsterers. They smooth the cloth over the chair, a section at a time, and pin it snugly to the chair right where the old upholstery was seamed or tacked. Then they cut the material to proper shape, allowing 1½ inches for seam allowance.

No danger of a botched job if you follow step-by-step directions of our 40-page booklet, Making Slip Covers Successfully. Diagrams and clear explanations for every stage, from measuring to finishing. Also chapter on permanent upholstery.

Send 15 cents for our booklet, Making Slip Covers Successfully, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and name of booklet.

New Recipes Make Crowd Cooking Easy

Organized Procedure Is Most Successful for Large Meal.

By Rebekah Blake.

COOKING for the crowd or entertaining in a big way at home might seem like an endless job, but with graduation and wedding festivities and garden parties and church socials in order at this season, quantity cookery is necessary, and you might as well take it in a calm, cool and collected manner. Whether you are planning for a family renion or you are on the committee for a club party, your problem is the same—how to please everybody and how to increase your favorite recipe from 6 to 60.

Women who are experienced in the art of cooking for crowds will seek fresh inspiration. Those who are facing this problem for the first time may be experiencing a sinking feeling and wondering why on earth they ever accepted the chairmanship of the supper.

The question of what to serve will be governed by two considerations. Is this a purely social occasion or is it for the purpose of raising funds? If the latter, you have the problem of planning an appetizing and satisfying meal that can be served for the price you plan to charge each person and bring you a profit.

Whether the occasion be purely social or for fund raising, there are a few simple points, based on common sense and good taste, which will greatly minister to the peace of mind of the person who is planning the meal and to the satisfaction of the guests who will partake of it.

Before selecting the menu consider your equipment. Plan the menu which you can prepare and serve with ease. If the available supply of china will not permit you to serve both salad and dessert without vexatious service delays or without making too much dishwashing, omit one of these courses.

Don't be afraid to serve a simple meal. Whether at home or as guests at a community supper, everyone would infinitely prefer a main dish and a salad or dessert perfectly cooked and served than to sit down to a pretentious meal of several courses where "the hot is served cold and the cold is lukewarm."

In planning the meal there are many factors to consider. It has been said that a person eats with his eyes. Color in the decorations, in the food served, in the garnish or the dish are all important to the enjoyment of the meal. A menu made up of bland flavored foods is perhaps no more objectionable than one made up of too highly flavored foods, but is a more common error in planning. Check the menu you plan to serve to be sure that there are contrasts in flavor. Include some tart, some spicy and some bland foods. Then check further for texture differences. The addition of relishes such as olives, radishes, celery, pickles and bright colored jelly will go far to add gaiety to the table and crispy relish to the meal.

When the menu has been selected, and the recipes collected, organize your work. The next step is to study the menu item by item and to delegate to your assistants the responsibility for the preparation of each dish in the menu so that nothing will be forgotten and all will be ready to serve at the time desired.

The following recipes may be helpful to you in preparing for your next party or community supper:

Sorority Punch.

(Serves 40.)

1 cup grated pineapple
2 quarts boiling water
2 cups freshly made tea
Juice of 6 lemons
Juice of 6 oranges
1 quart of grape juice
1 quart carbonated water
4 cups sugar

Cook the pineapple, sugar and water together 15 minutes. Add fruit juices and tea. Chill. One hour before serving time pour over cracked ice; add carbonated water and serve.

Drip Coffee.

(Urn method.)

1 pound coffee
2 gallons of boiling water

Fill the water jacket of the urn so that glass gauge registers about ¾ full. Heat to boiling point, but do not allow to boil. Replenish whenever the gauge shows less than ½ full.

Put the coffee in the urn bag or basket. Pour or siphon fresh and briskly boiling water evenly over the coffee. Cover and let water drip completely through once. Then remove bag or basket as seepage from grounds impairs delicacy or flavor and aroma. Replace the cover and serve. Makes 40 cups. It is not advisable to pour coffee back over the grounds, as this extracts a harsher flavor and impairs the delicacy of the beverage.

Savory Meat Loaf.

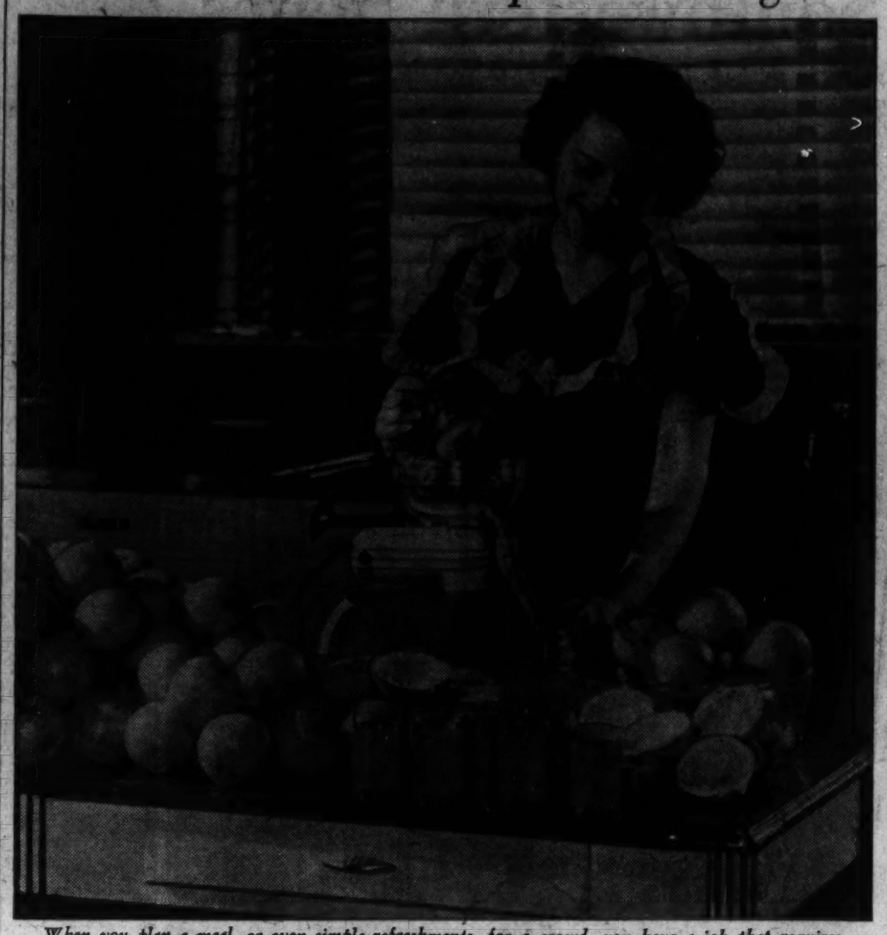
5 pounds round beef, ground
1½ cups quick-cooking tapioca
5 cups canned tomatoes, strained
2 tablespoons salt
½ teaspoon pepper

Try out salt pork, add onion and saute until golden brown. Add to remaining ingredients and mix thoroughly. Bake in greased loaf pans in a hot oven (450 F. for 15 minutes; then decrease heat to moderate (350 F.) and bake 30 minutes longer, or until done. Serve hot with tomato sauce, or serve cold.

Food for a Crowd Requires Planning



When you plan a meal, or even simple refreshments, for a crowd, you have a job that requires forethought. Tend to preliminary preparations beforehand if possible. If you are making fruit punch, extract the juice from the lemons and oranges and prepare other ingredients ready for combining just before the guests arrive.

Prizes Offered In Strawberry Recipe Contest

FRESH STRAWBERRIES are among the outstanding food values in the markets this week. These are such an enjoyable fruit that they should be included in menus as often as possible. And there are many ways of serving strawberries, so they need not become monotonous.

The Post recipe contest this week sends out a call for any recipe using strawberries. You may win some extra money with your favorite recipe. The cash awards for this contest are $3 for first prize, $2 for second prize and $1 for each of the three additional prizes.

Do you have a good recipe for strawberry biscuits, chantilly, fritters, hard sauce, ice cream or jelly? Or perhaps you have a pet way of making strawberry charlotte, strawberry and citrus cocktail, confectioner's icing, strawberry chiffon pie, strawberry ice or mousse or parfait, strawberry salad dressing, strawberry sandwiches, tartlets or cake or cottage pudding with strawberries.

Whatever your recipe may be, copy it neatly and send it to Rebekah Blake, The Post Food Editor, so she will receive it not later that Saturday noon. Be sure to write your name and address clearly on your recipe.

Tip on Cookie Baking Saves Time and Grease

When only one baking sheet is available here's how to speed things up when baking cookies: Roll out the cookies, cut them and arrange them on pieces of waxed paper cut to the size of the cookie sheet. Then, when one batch of cookies has finished baking, remove the cookie sheet from the oven, slide off the first batch—paper and all—and slide on the second batch. In this way you will save time and will not even have to grease the baking sheet.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Improving Posture.

1. Lying on the back; hands back of neck—Take a deep breath and raise chest high; keep chest up and exhale by pulling abdomen in hard.
2. Same position; knees bent, feet pulled up—Pull abdomen in hard and then relax part way; also done standing with hands clasped on top of head.
3. Sitting in a chair; trunk bending forward—Incline trunk forward from the hips, keeping spine straight. This is the position which should be taken when bending forward to write or to do any other kind of desk work. The absence of the lowered chest and rounded back and shoulders of the incorrect position is striking. This exercise may be done standing.
4. Standing; abdominal retraction—Stand with the heels 4 inches away from the wall, but with the hips, shoulders and head touching the wall; flatten the lower part of the back against the wall by pulling in the abdominal muscles. This causes a downward rolling motion in the lower part of the back and flattens the lumbar curve. Holding this position, come away from the wall with the weight well forward on the balls of the feet. This suggests the correct standing position, but it should be held in a graceful, flexible manner.
5. Standing; leg raising—Stand with hands on hips, back flat and chin in; raise leg forward without bending the knee; lower it; repeat with other leg. This exercise teaches how to hold the back flat while balancing the body and doing a leg exercise.
6. Carrying the head forward, clasp hands behind the head—Force the head back against their pressure, keeping chin in. This strengthens the muscles of the back of the neck.
7. Spinal curvatures—"Stand tall," holding the back straight. Rise on the toes with the arms extended forward and up, stretching the arms and the body.
8. Distended abdomen—This condition may be successfully prevented and largely overcome by exercises 2 and 4.

U.: "(1) Does chewing gum tend to make a person grow fat? (2) When smoking, if a person swallows the smoke, does it run down the condition of the body?"

Answer: (1) Chewing gum has no effect on the weight. (2) Smoke is absorbed from the capillaries of the mouth just the same as from the capillaries of the lung or the stomach. The capillaries of the lung are a little more liable to absorb it, and hence inhaling causes more absorption of tobacco than any other form. But the stomach is about the same as the mouth in absorbability.

Why Angel Cake Falls.

Two things may be wrong with the angel food cake that falls from the pan as soon as it is inverted. The flour used may have been slightly damp. (Dry it by placing it in a warm oven for about ten minutes. Then let it cool before it is used.) The cake also may have been removed from the oven before it was thoroughly baked.

Cutter for Gelatin.

To make molded gelatin without any molds simply make your favorite gelatin in an oblong pan. When ready to serve, cut gelatin into desired shape with cookie cutter, which has first been dipped in hot water.

Play Recalls Open Battle Of Last Year

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Pittsburgh Field Club, Aspinwall, Pa., May 28.—The memorable National Open battle of last year was relived here today on the outskirts of Pittsburgh, and again Tony Manero, the short, squat Italian from Winchester, Mass., was the victor, defeating Light Horse Harry Cooper, hardluck guy of the links, 1 up, after trailing by 4 holes at the twenty-seventh.

Harold "Jug" McSpaden, 39-hole winner over Henry Picard, of Hershey, and Ky Laffoon, the sole remaining challenge to the State of Massachusetts, which boasts three survivors.

A frantic, almost panicky gallery of several thousand persons trudged these hills today, as first one match and then another would produce bursts of thrilling, sub-par golf. Shute was the only winner to close out his opponent before the home hole, defeating Jimmy Hines, 4-and-3, while a final hole birdie from the red-hot putter of Ky Laffoon snuffed out the challenge of medalist Byron Nelson, 2 up.

Iron-nerved Henry Picard saw a pair of birdie putts on the thirty-sixth and thirty-eighth holes, slide past the cup, first right then left, and with them his last hope of victory as McSpaden pitched dead to the cup on the third extra hole for the match.

Shute was the lone victor who was not forced to win via the comeback route.

McSpaden Challenges.

Again today the challenge of "Jug" McSpaden for his first major title and place on the Ryder Cup team was a tribute to his shotmaking prowess as he played the 39 holes in even par, 72 in the morning, 73 in the afternoon and 1 under for the extra holes.

Denny Shute continued the rock steady play that has worn down four opponents since Wednesday, going just 1 over par for his 33-hole route, while Manero and Laffoon, each the victims of morning rounds 77s, rallied in the afternoon and finished 4 over.

Hines missed countless opportunities to put up a better fight against the lean, partly bald defending champion, but just wasn't there when the chips were down. Shute held a 1 up lead at nine holes, but it was increased to 3 at lunch when he birdied the sixteenth and seventeenth holes for wins.

Hines pulled a double birdie, on the third and fourth holes of the second round to cut Denny's lead to 1, but at a climactic point, chose to flub a second shot and lost the seventh hole, his last real opportunity.

The New Yorker blew a short putt on the ninth hole for a win and another on the tenth for a half. They each made birdies on the par 5 twelfth and Hines rapped in another on the thirteenth but badly missed a tee shot on the fourteenth hole and lost the fifteenth and the match to Denny's par 5.

McSpaden turned 2 up on Henry Picard at the conclusion of the morning round, dropping a 10, a pair of 12 and a 20-foot putt on the stretch to account for his lead. The gallery released yells and cheers and Jug pulled around a three-quarter stymie on the sixteenth hole and canned a 10-foot putt.

Makes Greatest Shot.

Picard was having trouble with his shots on the third nine and his pars and bogeys were prey to the beautiful recovery shooting of McSpaden.

A par and birdie on 11 and 12 cut the eventual winner's lead to 1 up but on the thirteenth he pulled undoubtedly the greatest shot of the tournament, playing a ball from a trap, 125 yards from the green, to within 3 inches of the pin, the ball hitting 5 feet beyond and rolling back.

Picard averted a half stymie to win the fifteenth, his mud-covered ball rolling into the cup, and he curled in a 16-footer on the next hole to square the match. McSpaden's approach shot on the seventeenth, or 35-hole, was in deep rough but he nearly sank the shot and again on the final hole it looked like Picard's rally was not in vain as he had a four-foot putt for the match but he missed.

McSpaden missed the green with his second on the first extra hole but recovered from a trap closer than Picard and was able to putt from 20 feet. Both putts were good. On the second, the "Chocolate Kid" missed a putt of some 5 feet, and with it the match, as his drive caught the rough on the par five third hole and he bowed to McSpaden's birdie.

The only even match of the day at the half-way point was the Laffoon-Nelson battle and it was only by three birdies on the second nine that Ky was able to square it at the turn. Nelson again assumed a lead of 1 up at the twenty-seventh as he played the nine in 37 strokes but Laffoon, bent on winning this title after weeks of faithful training, tricked in a trio of birdie putts of 10, 12 and 15 feet on the final nine holes for his victory.

Nelson, winner of Bobby Jones' masters tourney, had evidently reached his peak in his qualifying and earlier matches and could not combat the two second nine rushes of the part-Indian from the Middle West. Each of Laffoon's victories

Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, May 28 (AP).—Favored by the luck of the draw as well as more favorable reports on the condition of their ailing tennis ace, Adrian Karl Quist, the Australians today named Quist and the veteran Jack Crawford for the opening two singles matches with the United States tomorrow in the North American zone Davis Cup finals.

Crawford was drawn against America's No. 1 star, J. Donald Budge, of California, for the first singles contest, best three out of five sets. Quist was paired with Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, 125-pound Atlantan, who was named to compete in the zone trials for the first time since he has been battling his way up the tennis scale.

Play is slated to start at 1 p. m. (E. S. T.) tomorrow at Forest Hills. One of the heaviest advance sales for any international tennis competition since America last defended, and lost, the Davis Cup, in 1927, at Philadelphia, was reported. Barring bad weather, there may be a capacity crowd of nearly 14,000 in the stands. Speculators asked as high as $18 for a pair of choice seats.

Figuratively, Capt. Clifford Sproule, of the Australians, had his fingers crossed when he nominated Quist to keep his place in the lineup and then drew the names at the swanky Racquet and Tennis Club. The fact that the ailing Quist was drawn against America's No. 2 man, Grant, was considered a "break" in favor of the invaders.

Ill for the past week with intestinal "flu," Quist was reported considerably improved and in "much better spirits" today. He had no temperature and went through a brisk 20-minute workout.

Marcum Gives 6 Hits; Cronin Fielding Star

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Boston, Mass., May 28.—There was a lot of nice baseball played at Fenway Park this afternoon, but your Nats committed none of it. In fact the Washington athletes simply stooged for the Red Sox, who pranced to a 7-0 victory amid the applause of the ladies' day gathering.

The Bostonians started cuffing the Nats about in the first inning when they shook Buck Newson loose from two runs and they kept it up all afternoon. It was an exceedingly feeble Washington team that today absorbed its first shutout defeat of the season.

Just to give you a fair idea of how the Nats were not swatting the ball, they managed to get only one man past second base and they only got two that far. Any time a Washington hitter had two balls and a strike up there at the plate, it was virtually a batting rally.

Their chief tormentor was big Johnny Marcum, the hill-billy right-hander who set the Nats down with six hits. Marcum was a fair country pitcher today as he recorded his fifth victory of the season. The one man he did permit to reach third base, he wild-pitched to that spot.

And when he needed a bit of help from his colleagues, well, there was Manager Joe Cronin rambling around shortstop like a relentless wraith and Buster Mills playing the outfield like a composite of Tris Speaker, Harry Hooper and Duffy Lewis.

Buck Newsom wasn't much help to the Nats. In fact, he was quite a detriment. He had a hop on his fast one, but the Red Sox put it there. Six hits hopped into distant sections of the outfield during the four innings Bucky Harris permitted Newsom to pitch.

McNair Comes Through.

Newsom wasn't much help to himself, either. He kept his pitches in the park, but he had a time of it locating the plate. He walked six hitters in those first few innings, and four of 'em scored.

He walked the first two men to face him—Mills, and Gaffke—and then he slipped on the wet sod in an attempt to field Cramer's bunt and the bases were full. It appeared as though he would get out of the inning with one-run damage when Buddy Lewis converted Cronin's hot smash into a double play on which Mills scored from third, but along came Eric McNair with the first of his three consecutive singles and the Sox had a 2-0 lead.

They had a 3-0 lead before they were finished with Newsom in the third. Roger Cramer slashed a single off Buddy Lewis' upstretched glove and was on third with two out when Newsom pitched another single to the McNair fellow.

Newsom inspired the Red Sox to collect some more runs in the fourth, and they did. He made it hard for himself when he again walked the first two men to face him—Higgins and Desautels—and after Marcum moved 'em up with a sacrifice bunt, Buster Mills scored 'em both with a long double off the centerfield wall.

That made it 4 to 0, and a moment later Gaffke made it 5 to 0 with a double off the leftfield wall that scored Mills. But Newsom was none too lucky in that inning. Before Gaffke doubled Newsom apparently had him out, but Joe Kuhel dropped his foul pop.

Luke Goes to Mound.

After that Harris dispensed with Newsom and Ed Linke held the Sox to one run during the last four innings, striking out five of 'em. They got the run when Higgins singled to right in the seventh with Foxx, who had walked, reposing on second at the time.

Buddy Lewis collected two of the Nats' six hits, but it was Al Simmons, who gave them their best scoring chance. That was when he doubled to left with one out in the second. But Joe Kuhel popped up, and after Marcum wild-pitched Simmons to third, Travis walked and young Milton Gray left both his colleagues on base with an infield pop.

The last Nat to reach second base was Ben Chapman, who beat out an infield hit in the third and was pushed up a base on Lewis' single to left, but Buddy Myer struck out and Johnny Stone filed weakly to center.

It was all pretty futile for the Nats.

Recovery of Detroit Pilot Now Certain

Doctor Encouraged by Progress; Thinks Crisis Is Past.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 28.—Hopes for the recovery of Mickey Cochrane, Detroit baseball manager who was struck in the temple by a pitched ball Tuesday, soared today.

For the first time, Dr. Robert Emmet Walsh, chief in attendance for the stricken baseball star, came out of the sick room with an encouraging statement.

"I am encouraged, definitely so," said Dr. Walsh. He refused to discuss the case further, but Mrs. Cochrane and friends were elated by that brief statement from the tight-lipped doctor.

Mrs. Cochrane and Walter O. Briggs, jr., son of the Detroit club-owner, were permitted to talk briefly to Cochrane today. They both said he seemed mentally alert and cheerful.

"My father wanted me to see that Mickey was getting the best possible care and I found he is," said young Briggs. "He does not seem to be uncomfortable and is anxious for news about the Tigers."

The danger of secondary meningitis or infection of the sinuses, which long have bothered Mickey, still was guarded against by physicians.

Irish Grid Ace Goes Under Knife

Chicago, May 28.—Bill Shakespeare, former Notre Dame football star, was "doing very well" today following an emergency appendicitis operation performed shortly after midnight.

The star halfback and kicker of the 1933-34-35 Irish teams was hurried from Norte Dame where he has been doing post-graduate work, to Chicago and was immediately operated on by Drs. Michael F. McGuire, Deno O'Connor and John Mohardt.

Net Stars to Wed.

Dundee, Scotland, May 28.—Ronald Ellis, 24, of Inder-Gowie, today announced his engagement to Anita Lizana, Chilean tennis star. No date for the wedding was announced. Ellis and Mlle. Lizana met a year ago when they competed in the Scottish tennis championships.

Terp Stickmen Tackle State In Title Tilt

Collegiate sports bow out of the local picture this afternoon at College Park where Maryland's lacrosse ten faces off with Penn State in a match that will decide whether the Terps are to retain their national championship. The match features an alumni day program, and will be preceded at 1 p. m. by one between freshmen teams.

Undefeated thus far, the Old Liners have only to dispose of the Lions to keep their title, and, judging by comparative performances, they should have little trouble. State won five of its eight matches, losing to Harvard, Syracuse and Army, but it does not appear to have a defense capable of stopping Coach Jack Faber's potent point-producers.

Mrs. Shute's Luck Charms Aid Hubby

By a Staff Correspondent.

Pittsburgh, May 28.—Mrs. Denny Shute, wife of the lanky titleholder, followed her victorious husband the entire route here today, with a rabbit's foot in one pocket and five four-leaf clovers in another.

A photographer from a local paper presented the clovers to the beautiful Mrs. Shute. He found them in a clover patch which Harry Cooper had the previous round called several uncomplimentary names. There may be something to that, as Shute won and Cooper lost after being 4 up and 9 to play. Mrs. McSpaden also followed her husband the route, bursting into tears when his putt on the thirty-ninth hole defeated Henry Picard.

Two Die, Five Injured in Two Crashes at Indianapolis Oval

Indianapolis, May 28.—Two men died in accidents at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway today as drivers performed at dizzy speeds in tests for Monday's 500-mile race.

Two crackups resulted in the two deaths and the injury of five persons.

Warford met death as a car driven by Overton Phillips, of Los Angeles, its gasoline tank punctured by a broken bit of mechanism, burst into flames and out of control, ran wild into the pit section opposite the main grand stand.

The blazing car collided with another machine being prepared by Vern Orendorff for a speed test, set this machine afire and both were destroyed.

Injured in this accident were Phillips, Walter King of Binghamton, N. Y., riding with Phillips; Otto Rhode, of Toledo, Ohio, chief engineer of the Champion Spark Plug Co., and Anthony Caccia, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., whose brother, Joe Caccia, was victim of a flaming crash at the speedway several years ago. Rhode and Caccia were in the pits and were caught in the path of Phillips' car.

The wreckage of the two cars was hauled away and drivers again took the track for tune-up tests and qualification runs.

Just before dusk Frank McGurk, of Los Angeles, with Opalko in the mechanic's seat, started on a qualification trip of 25 miles. He had completed four laps of the 2½-mile track when disaster overtook him. A connecting rod broke and the car plunged through an inner rail and rolled over and over, hurling out the two occupants.

Roosevelt Deals 7-5 Defeat to W.-L. High

A seventh-inning rally gave Roosevelt High a 7-to-5 victory over Washington-Lee High's strong ball club yesterday at Ballston, Va. With the count 3 to 3, John Arbuthnot reached first on Anderson's error, Art Miller singled, Gerald Tassa tripled and Joe Comer singled to drive in three runs.

Pastor Victor Over Nestell

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, May 28.—Bob Pastor, 183¼, of New York, punched young Bob Nestell, 191, of Los Angeles, out of the front ranks of the nation's heavyweight hopefuls tonight, winning by a wide margin a 10-round decision before more than 30,000 fans at Wrigley Field.

After a wild first round, in which both fighters hit the floor in a vicious exchange of blows, the squat New Yorker went on to deal out a near-brutal beating to the Californian.

Both started punching at the opening bell. Pastor took two rights to the head, but uncorked a right that sent Nestell down for an eight count. Nestell got up shakily, took another to the head and suddenly connected a right to Pastor's chin. Pastor plumbed in a sitting position on the canvas, but jumped up without a count, and carried the round by a slim margin.

Indiana U. Wins.

Columbus, Ohio, May 28 (AP).—Indiana University's baseball team punched across a run in the first half of the ninth inning to breack a 12-to-12 deadlock and beat Ohio State University, 13-12, here today.

referee for the series and presiding official at today's draw, said the Australians would be permitted to make an eleventh-hour shift, if a medical report on Quist's condition so justified.

Crawford, who has impressed observers in his workouts, now is the "key" man in the Anzac drive to repeat its 3-2 victory of last year over the Americans.

Grant, picked over Frankie Parker for the No. 2 singles spot, has not played other Australian singles star. The tiny Georgian, although strictly a "gamble" on grass courts, makes up in agility and fighting spirit whatever he lacks in power. Having clinched his cup berth, after several seasons of disappointment, Grant has his chance to confound critics as well as to strike a telling blow for the home side.

Tigers Move Into Second; Cincy Loses

By the United Press.

New York, May 28.—The Detroit Tigers climbed into second place in the American League today by winning a double-header from the St. Louis Browns, 6-5 and 7-2. The double triumph left the Tigers only a game and a half behind the league-leading New York Yankees, who were idle because of wet grounds.

Eldon Auker just lasted to win the first game, 6-5, his first triumph since the opening game of the season. Hank Greenberg hit his eighth homer of the season. Roxie Lawson kept 10 hits well scattered in winning the second game for his eighth triumph of the season, more than any other American League pitcher has won.

The Chicago White Sox won a 10-inning game from the Cleveland Indians, 3-2, with Vernon Kennedy outpitching Dennis Galehouse. Zeke Bonura's double in the tenth, scoring Radcliff, who had walked, decided the game. The White Sox scored the tying run in the eighth on a walk to Radcliff and singles by Kreevich and Walker. Hal Trosky hit a homer in the second.

Pittsburgh broke its three-game losing streak by thumping the St. Louis Cardinals, 10-3. The Pirates broke up a close game by scoring six runs in the eighth off Jess Haines and Jim Winford. The victory increased Pittsburgh's lead over the New York Giants to a game and a half.

The Chicago Cubs walloped the Cincinnati Reds, 12-3, making 14 hits off Moore, Brennan, Hallahan and Hollingsworth. Frank Demaree hit a double and two singles. Charley Root kept the Reds' eight hits scattered, winning his fourth game. Alex Kampouris hit a homer with one on for two of the Reds' three runs.

No other games were played.

Bolton Is Here; To Meet Griff

Conference Scheduled 10 A. M. Today.

Cliff Bolton, the Washington catcher who abruptly quit the team at the height of the training season, arrived in town last night, bronzed and brusque, ready to do a little verbal pitching with Clark Griffith. They will confer this morning at 10 o'clock.

Lean and apparently fit, although he admitted to not being in the best condition, Bolton refused to comment on his meeting with Griffith, other than that he will "tell all" unless he comes to terms with the old gentleman.

Bolton feels that he was wronged by stories emanating from Florida to the effect that he stopped the bus en route to Leland and entrained for home when club officials thought he was headed for Chattanooga to have his arm treated.

"I wasn't even on the bus," he declared. "Our team left early that morning for Sarasota and I was left behind because of my arm. I tried to find Mr. Griffith and tell him of my intention to return home, but he'd gone with the team. So I just got on the train and left."

If he comes to terms Bolton wants a few days to get in playing condition. He has been engaged in farming and looks fit, although his baseball has suffered because of his absence from the diamond. In the only game he participated in this season Cliff caught for a hosiery mill back home, and went hitless in two trips to the plate.

CharlesTown Track Lures Good Fields

Milton Rouss Memorial Will Feature Opening Card.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

For the first time this year, racing dates conflict in the Washington area today. Up in the panhandle of West Virginia, the Charles Town track opens its 32-day meeting while on the other side of the Potomac the Hagerstown track will close its ten-day meeting.

The $1,000 added Milton O. Rouss Memorial Handicap features the eight-race card at Charles Town. Eight good sprinters have been named for the trip over the Charles Town course, a route of slightly more than 6 furlongs. J. B. Belk's Wise Sister and the three-horse Claude Feltner entry probably will vie for favoritism. Feltner has Emvee, Barn Stormer and Small Change, all recent winners, ready for the test.

Jadaan, winner of last Saturday's feature at Hagerstown; the speedy Stool Pigeon; Postponement and Quick Vine complete the line-up.

Other races on the program range from the opening event, a dash of 4½ furlongs for 2-year-olds, to a test of a mile and a sixteenth for older horses that is the day's finale.

Charles Town has the same official family, headed by Al Boyle, which has conducted successful racing there for the past four meetings. T. C. Bradley, who did much to better the brand of racing, is again a steward.

Racing Secretary Freddie Burton is arranging the program and Roy Watson is in charge of the mutuel department, with the daily double on the second and third races. George (Red) Palmer has been retained as starter. Post time at Charles Town will be 2:15 p. m.

Hagerstown has a pair of promising $700 races, the Decoration Day Handicap and the Cumberland Purse. The first is a sprint of five furlongs, in which the entry of Miss Epe and Chief Hollis is slated for the chief backing. The other contest is over the mile and sixteenth course. Five horses that won at the meeting are included in the entries and there is no outstanding choice.

Hagerstown will conduct its daily double on the first and second races. Post time will be 2 o'clock.

Yesterday's daily double at Hagerstown was the smallest since the start of the meeting and one of the most heavily played in the history of the Hub City track. A small army of betters collected the $8.80 pay off that resulted from victories of Reigh Tetrarch in the first race and Petee Lad in the second. Both were favorites, and turned in decisive wins.

Drama of Past Is Picturized At the Palace

"THIS IS MY AFFAIR." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a story by Allen Rivkin and Lamar Trotti, starring Robert Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck, supported by Victor McLaglen, Brian Donlevy, Frank Conroy, Sidney Blackmer and Robert McWade. Directed by William Seiter. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Dorothea Lewis.

Bank robbers plagued the Administration of President McKinley, lessening the confidence of the people in a Government that saw one national bank after another plundered while the criminals escaped scot-free. The police and the Secret Service failed, and so President McKinley selected a young naval lieutenant as his secret and personal agent to end the racket and discover the "man higher up."

No one knew of their pact. The lieutenant pursues his quarry to the death house, putting himself in the shadow of the noose, serene in the knowledge that the President will release him, and then the President is assassinated!

The prison scenes are excellent, full of force and suspense; and elegant little chills may chase themselves up and down your spine, as they did up and down ours, at the thought of the brave young lieutenant's plight.

Too much of the picture, however, is padding—great stressing of the period without much of its feel. Maybe this is because we feel Mr. Taylor and Miss Stanwyk are so obviously 1930.

Needs to Be Mussed.

Robert Taylor is his usual attractive self but is showing signs of going beyond his commendable habit of not overacting into just not acting at all. In moments when he doesn't have to smile and beam charmingly, he is quite convincing, particularly in the prison scenes where he does some of his best work.

Even here, he could give it a bit more if he wants to come up to Vic McLaglen's play-pretending in this part of the picture. Some day maybe they'll muss him up and let us see if he can live up to the promise he continually gives.

Historical characters in the movies always bother us because they are so intent on being good copies. Frank Conroy, however, presents an admirable McKinley and Sidney Blackmer's Roosevelt is surprising. The Admiral Dewey of Robert McWade is a good make-up job.

This week's subsidiaries are notable for an amusing Mickey Mouse cartoon with Mickey as a magician at last giving Donald Duck his comeuppance, and an interesting Pete Smith short, revealing Fred Perry's tennis magic. The newsreel completes the bill.

Trans-Lux

Another world-spanning edition of the "March of Time" tops the new program at the Trans-Lux Theater with the very current and confusing puzzle problem coming in for a screen close-up. Good puzzles, bad ones, the postal sleuths checking on the frauds and the tons of answers pouring in for that one big picture game that has had millions on their ears. Unemployment and the new Irish constitution share edu ational spots in what is one of the best of recent editions of the Time cavalcade.

King Christian, boats, fliers and honors to the Washington war dead stand out in the current news parade, with the John D. Rockefeller funeral and Stanley Baldwin giving up the job of premier of Great Britain filling the Trans-Lux screen with some impressive camera shots. Ladies wrestle, motorcycles attack steep hills, the New York-Bermuda air service opens, Il Duce's air champ hangs up a new record, Eddie and Wallis get their faces in movie print, Mr. Kennedy, United States ship boss, says "We've got to have a merchant marine—and now!" and Dr. Eckener gets promises from Secretary Roper that the Germans will get helium.

A soothing journey through Norway's fjords with the camera wandering the historic streets of Oslo, and Disney's "Mother Pluto," in color, round out a program that has nice diversity.

Columbia

Executed entirely in the newly perfected three-tone Technicolor process, "A Star Is Born" is playing a repeat downtown engagement as chief screen feature on the new week's bill at Loew's Columbia Theater.

In this subject, Frederic March and Janet Gaynor offer portrayals that match perhaps the best they ever have done for the cinema—Mr. March as an actor who is on his way down; Miss Gaynor as an unknown, who is on her way up. Their opposite courses cross with tragic results to one of them and a later exaltation of spirit on the part of the other.

There is a strong supporting cast in the contributory roles, led by Adolphe Menjou and May Robson. Menjou is one minute as hard as nails and the next as compassionate as a young mother. Miss Robson is Janet Gaynor's guiding spirit in her quest of fame in Hollywood and does the same grand job of it she always does in any assignment allotted her.

Another member of the cast who does a fine, but totally unsympathetic piece of character limning is Lionel Stander as the press agent. He will be cordially despised, but his work stands out as an excellent bit of craftsmanship.

The bill is completed by the customary short-reel subjects and a new release of "Events of the Day," reflecting the news of the week upon the screen.

Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops

Grim Drama Is Shown on Capitol Screen; Riotous Comedy Dominates the Earle Bill

"THEY GAVE HIM A GUN." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by William Joyce Cowen, adapted to the screen by Cyril Hume, Mitchell Malbaum and Maurice Rapf, featuring Spencer Tracy, Gladys George and Franchot Tone, with Edgar Dearing, Mary Treen, Clif Edwards and Charles Trowbridge. Directed by Woodbridge S. Van Dyke. Reviewed Friday afternoon at Loew's Capitol Theater.

It is pretty grim business that is set forth in this subject which, at least, is engrossing to the male mind.

BELL.

There are three movements of plot in "They Gave Him a Gun"—first the war, in which a weakling was taught how to shoot and from the depths of his cowardice be ruthless to his enemies; then a gangster sequence, in which the battlefield technique is carried belligerently into private life, and finally the love element that strives to salvage a craven with no good result, except that he is shot down by police bullets under the direction of the officer who had taught him how to wield a weapon in world strife.

There is, to be sure, a feminine touch that runs through the length of the filmed narrative, but I doubt that it will be sufficient to dominate the more sinister aspects of a tale that concerns itself principally with a killer. The picture has been cast with fine judgment and anything it may lack in universal appeal assuredly cannot be charged to those in the pivotal roles.

Spencer Tracy, Gladys George and Franchot Tone are those who are seen in the three roles that completely dominate the play. Tracy is a sideshow barker who takes life in his stride; Tone, the cowardly young fellow who found courage only in the possession of a gun, and Miss George, the nurse with whom both men were in love, but Jimmy, the crook, won. From this contraposition of characters and reactions to the influences of armed conflict have been evolved a series of situations that are taut with drama, occasionally pathetic and always interesting.

Phil Regan Headlines.

Tracy plays with his customary close-clipped and close-lipped speech and conveys a distinct notion of power by the very repression of his work. He resembles Ronald Colman in this unique ability. Tone, the weakest and most pitiable character in the drama, assumes a melodramatic part of inflated ego and deflated heart. It somehow brings back memories of the work he did in that forbidding drama of the South, "The House of Connelly," on the stage. Miss George is as competent as she was in "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," although her part here is not quite so valiant as the earlier one in which she made her screen debut before the microphones. There was a time back in the silent days when Miss George was an appreciable figure in the cinema. Miss George is perhaps a little too well groomed for the most realistic details of "They Gave Him a Gun," but there is nothing that can be lodged against her ability as an actress. Her part is largely emotional and she discharges her duties well.

The production is well up to the M-G-M standards of excellence and Maj. Woody S. Van Dyke, the director, has, as usual, made no mistakes in his counterpointing of dramatic incidents and effects.

On the stage at the Capitol this week the bill is headlined by Phil Regan, who is in fine fettle and fine voice. Seen recently on the screen in a brief succession of singing roles Phil brings to the Capitol stage a greater measure of personal appeal than the silver sheet is able to convey. His songs are well chosen and his reception yesterday afternoon was further evidence of the esteem in which he is held by Washington theatergoers.

Others on the vaudeville portion of the program include Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford, whose work at the consoles of the finest theater organs in the country long has been a marvel to their listeners. They present a series of offerings that will further enhance their prestige among masters of the triple-manuals. "Popeye the Sailor," otherwise known as Harry Foster Welch, does about the things that you would expect the spinach vendor to do, and the "Five Tip-Top Girls" contribute an act that seems to deserve its title of "Speed." The Lime Trio, as "The Golliwogs" bring back the act that is familiar from past showings here.

The Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's orchestral interludes further augment a feature that will engross those who do not object to a bit of vivid melodrama in their screen fare.

Metropolitan

The Mauch twins continue their pretending in the Mark Twain story of a pauper-prince mix-up which "could have happened." Which is not surprising, for it is a tale which will delight lovers of children, those who care for pomp and ceremony and those who like a bit of swashbuckling.

Errol Flynn supplies the latter ingredient as the soldier of fortune who rescues the prince from the indignities showered upon him by the father of the pauper-lad, whilst the innocent impostor sat uneasily upon the throne.

Growing out of a boyish whim of the princes, the two children exchange clothing. Tom, the thief's son, gets a taste of royal life, which means so little to him that he uses the great seal of England for nut-cracking. Edward, the king-to-be, learns of the manner of living among the lower of his subjects.

After unscrupulous scoundrelling by Claude Rains, as Protector, fencing exhibitions, etc., by dashing Mr. Flynn, skull-duggery by Tom's thievish father (Barton McLane) and sundry exciting events, the real prince is crowned.

In the compiled Universal-Paramount newsreel, there are shots of the Rockefeller funeral cortege, motorcycle daredevils and a view of the sit-down strikers at Wilsonville, Ills., mine.

Charlie Sees Land, or Something

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDDLER

Hollywood, May 28.—Idol chatter: Impressionistic drawing of Martha Raye; Loco girl makes good. I never hear the expression "twinkling eyes" without thought of Shirley Temple. Walter Connolly talks as if his mouth were filled with mush. Candidate for slickest hair comb: George Raft. The microphone has just about doubled the average life of a star. Wonder if Bette Davis' husband ever thinks of her as she appeared in "Of Human Bondage?" Fredric March cannot resist slapping people who bend over.

SHIRLEY TEMPLE

Greta Garbo dines by candlelight, with or without George Brent. Slim Summerville won 36 bets out of 37 that nobody at his studio knew his given name (it is George, but did you know?). Household servants call Jean Harlow and her mother "Baby Jean" and "Mama Jean." Edmund Lowe is rejuvenating dark gray shirts and orange ties. Too many high-hat actors might lead you to believe the State's name is spelled: Cali-phoney-a. Herman Bing's hysterical exaggerations leaves me limp from laughter.

Hollywood is predicting that if Joan Crawford divorces her next quest will be for a title. Unforgetable scene: The locust scourge in "The Good Earth." Freddie Bartholomew is pround of his gang nickname, Butch. I just this minute realized how unglamorous Ida Lupino's first name is. Edward Arnold is left-handed, but for my money his acting is right. Doubles in ponderous motion: Ed Kennedy and the elephant. Isabel Jewel's pet grief is her tininess.

Maybe it is because his two wives were much older women that Clark Gable receives so much mail from romantic widows and would-be-romantic spinsters.

I suppose you would call Joan Crawford a "gorgeous mis-fit," what with her shoulders being size 18, her chest size 14, and her hips size 12. At any rate, she was telling me how she fooled a sales girl in a smart boulevard shop one day this week. The girl was persistent that Joan try on an attractive size 14 dress. "I argued with the girl that the shoulders weren't broad enough," Joan explained, "but she insisted that I try the dress anyway. I agreed after warning her that it was her own responsibility. So I held my breath until the gown was all buttoned. Then I took a deep breath and squared my shoulders." Joan tore loose every button; they pattered against the wall like machinegun bullets. "Of course, I paid to have them sewed back on," Miss Crawford added with a grin, "but it was worth it, because hereafter the girls at that store will believe me."

On the subject of sales girls, Robert Taylor and I drove into one of those eat-in-your-car stands after a preview the other night. I gave the order for two ham-on-ryes, so the pretty tray-hopper did not catch sight of Bob until she walked around to his side of the car to deliver his sandwich and coffee.

As she passed the tray through the window, she suddenly discovered whom she was serving. Flustered, she dropped the tray, and Bob's trousers were buried under butter, bread, meat and hot coffee. He looked at the mess, then at the girl. Finally he grinned and said, "You certainly laid your complaints right in my lap!" The quip was all that saved her from tears. I felt rather proud of Bob.

Textile Industries Face Investigation

• • • to injure, oppress, threaten or intimidate employes in the exercise of rights guaranteed under the national labor relations act."

This investigation is the second such inquiry to be ordered in recent weeks. Justice agents now are engaged in collecting data on similar charges against coal operators of Harlan County on complaints made by John L. Lewis, industrial union leader, and others.

The Harlan investigation was undertaken under the same provision of the United States Code, McMahon said last night. At the time the Harlan orders were announced, the general view was that it was being undertaken because violence was involved, and that collective bargaining rights would be left to enforcement by the National Labor Relations Board.

"The Wagner act is the law of the United States," McMahon said, on this score. "We are proceeding on the theory its guaranties should not be denied any citizen, as section 51 of the code provides.

McMahon denied there will be any jurisdictional clash between the board and the department. He said "our only interest is in the crime," if one has been committed.

Questioned as to the likelihood this new policy will require heavy staff additions at the department, McMahon said:

"That is a problem, all-right. As the Attorney General has pointed out, other departments can estimate each year on a more or less fixed basis. But we cannot govern the volume of our own business, which depends on how many complaints are filed, cases arising and similar factors."

'Turn Off the Moon' Has Music, Dance and Fun to Commend It.

"TURN OFF THE MOON." Paramount picturization of a story by Marguerite Roberts, adapted to the screen by Miss Roberts, Harlan Ware and Paul Gerard Smith, featuring Charles Ruggles and Marjorie Gateson, with Eleanore Whitney, Johnny Downs, Grady Sutton, Ben Blue, Andrew Tombes, Franklin Pangborn, the Albee Sisters, Kenny Baker and Phil Harris' Orchestra, Christy and Gould and the Panchonettes. Music and lyrics by Sam Coslow. Directed by Lewis R. Seiler. Reviewed Friday afternoon at the Earle Theater.

At regular intervals, Paramount may be relied upon to release an utterly fluffy and whimsical musical piece that has no other purpose in the world than to promote laughter. This time it is "Turn Off the Moon," the musical frivolity on the screen at the Earle Theater this week, with Charles Ruggles in the principal role of a department store owner, who does not quite know his way about.

"Turn Off the Moon" is of no consequence whatever beyond the mere matter of ebullient entertainment. There is nothing to worry about here in the way of problem, strife or deep-dish drama. Just a lot of fun.

Some tricky tunes and lyrics have been contrived for this picture by Sam Coslow and there are a number of clever players, specialists, instrumentalists and the like, in addition to Mr. Ruggles, to dress it up. Eleanore Whitney and Johnny Downs provide the romantic interest, Miss Whitney being reputedly the fastest tapping dancer known to the race of man. Mr. Downs is an up-and-coming young leading juvenile who seems always able to handle himself acceptably in any assignment.

Good Orchestra Scores.

Then there are Phil Harris and his orchestra, one of the best bands known to the ear. They provide musical background for the crazy story in which Mr. Ruggles assumes to be an astrologer, Miss Gateson takes the opposite role so long occupied by Mary Boland and Franklin Panghorn, Andrew Tombes and the rest fill in the chinks.

It is a considerable chink that this fellow Ben Blue fills in, by the way. One of the stage's prize zanies, he seems to becoming even crazier, if possible, for the purposes of the celluloids. This former Washingtonian is a comedian of the first rank—a low comedian, but first rank—who can dance, has a fine sense of timing and is so grotesque in appearance as to be a hearty laugh if he does nothing but stand there—which he never does.

There is not sufficient plot substance in a thing of this kind to justify expansive analysis, but it is a lot of fun, for those who, on occasion, are able to let themselves go. I hope you are one.

Collegians on Stage.

The stage headliners at the Earle this week perpetuate the genial atmosphere of inconsequentiality engendered by the feature picture. The California Collegians, next to the Britton Brothers' Band, probably are the most hysterical lunatics on the boards. They virtually tear down the house in the enthusiasm of their clowning and certainly they tear down the audience. There isn't a shred of you left after you get through watching and listening to these agile candidates for the straitjacket. They are up to their old tricks this week and are a panic. There are the boys, if you remember, who appeared in "Roberta," on the screen, with Irene Dunne and Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers.

Next in importance come Louise Massey and her Westerners, that favorite stage and radio group who do so much to bring songs of the plains and the roundups to the level of real musicianship. Their singing and incidental instrumentalism make this one of the foremost attractions before the public. It always receives a round of applause that would do the heart of any actor good, or any singer, or any guitar twanger.

Grace and Nikko and the Three Jackson Boys are the other participants in the stage portion of the goings-on and acquit themselves with fair credit.

A new issue of the Paramount News and the orchestral contributions under the baton of Freddie Clark round out an entertainment that may be designated as one that falls distinctly within the range of those designed to do credit to what is technically known as the early summer "silly" season.

Wheat Slumps 3¾ Cents With Eastern Sales

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 28.—With Eastern houses conspicuous sellers, and with holidays ahead indicating likelihood of curtailed export business, wheat values here fell 3¾ cents a bushel today, maximum.

Reports of 1937 new crop domestic wheat moving to market in the Southwest, notably at Fort Worth, Tex., counted as a bearish influence, and so, too, did asserted improvement of domestic crop conditions because of moisture of late in sections where wanted. Crop advices from Canada and from some European countries were also looked as showing betterment.

Tending further to pull wheat prices lower was a disposition which numerous would-be buyers evinced to await autoritatively unofficial monthly crop summaries here scheduled for June 2. Meanwhile, only about 200,000 bushels of Canadian wheat were taken today for export.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures ranged from 2½ to 3⅛ cents under yesterday's finish; July, $1.15⅞-$1.16; September, $1.14-$1.14½; December, $1.15⅝-$1.15¾; corn, 1½ off to ½ up; July, $1.25¾-$1.25⅞; September, $1.12⅝-$1.12¾; December, 82½-82⅝; oats showing ⅝-⅞ decline; July, 45½-45⅝, and rye, 1⅛-¾ down; July $1.06⅜. The outcome in provisions varied from 17 cents setback to 10 cents advance.

Week's Financing At Low Level

New York, May 28 (AP).—New financing this week remained at a low level, with underwriters hesitating to offer issues in the present quiet state of the bond market.

A survey by Poor's Publishing Co. indicated offering of 27 issues, totaling $17,453,718, compared with 22 issues aggregating $14,916,000 the preceding week and 43 issues of $82,732,468 a year ago.

Industrialists, Workers Share In Pay Boosts

American Tobacco Head Now Gets $246,173; Some Are Cut.

By the Associated Press.

Corporation presidents, as well as laborers, got many pay raises in the last year.

Among the thousands of annual reports of corporations flooding into the Securities and Exchange Commission, the number of officers reporting better remuneration (salary or other pay such as bonuses) is high and those reporting cuts are few.

The highest figure reported to date is the $246,173 pay received last year by George W. Hill, head of the American Tobacco Co. He received $212,000 the previous year.

Some of the largest raises fell to E. T. Stannard, president of the Kennecott Copper Corporation, from $75,480 to $92,166, and to W. S. S. Rodgers, head of the Texas Corporation, from $54,166 to $95,000.

Among other raises were: T. Albert Potter, Elgin National Watch Co., from $44,045 to $57,651; E. J. Magnin, I. Magnin, Inc., of San Francisco, from $36,390 to $56,866; Modie J. Spiegel, jr., Spiegel, Inc., of Chicago, from $60,000 to $75,000; George A. Blackmore, Westinghouse Airbrake, from $42,300 to $57,475; Moses Pendleton, American Woolen Co., from $50,450 to $62,925; Alvan Macauley, Packard Motor Car Co., from $50,269 to $70,299; Ralph E. Day, Bridgeport Brass Co., from $36,260 to $46,240; Claire L. Barnes, Houdaille-Hershey Corp., from $44,833 to $60,000;

Among the rare cuts in pay were the following: W. F. Detwiler, executive vice president of Alleghany Steel Corp., from $111,704 to $86,790; G. H. Lorimer, Curtis Publishing Co., from $90,000 to $79,999; Cornelius F. Kelly, Anaconda Copper Mining Co., from $168,138 to $167,263; Edwin D. Bransome, Vanadium Corp., from $32,725 to $25,209; Frank Purcell, Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co., from $60,000 to $42,720.

Curb Irregular In Light Trading

New York, May 28 (AP).—A few industrial shares made progress in a market of conflicting trends on the curb today. Aluminum Co. of America closed at 148½, up 1½; Pittsburgh Plate Glass 127, up 1¾ and Todd Shipyards 74¾, up 2¾. The last named issue was apparently helped by a report for the 12 months ended March 31, showing per share earnings of $6.88 against $3.81 for the previous 12 months.

Several leaders lost ground under pre-holiday trimming of accounts. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea dipped to 85½, off 2¼; Lake Shore Mines, 49½ off 1¼; Montgomery Ward "A" 137¼, off 2¼. Transactions were the lowest in nearly a year at 154,000 shares against 159,000 shares yesterday.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Improve Moderately in Dullest Trading in Two Years; Wheat Prices Drop.

Government bonds and stocks improved a little but rains had a setback on better weather reports. In spite of the tendency of prices to work irregularly higher, stock sales volume fell to the lowest since April 3, 1935, at around 550,000 shares. The day's dealings were in the nature of "evening up" in advance of the holidays, with shorts leaving the field. July wheat closed 2⅜ cents lower at 116 cents a bushel.

Financial markets closed for the three-day holiday with a feeling that next month's operations scarcely will be duller and that the outlook is fair for a rise in dealings. In general the slackness of this month has been in the nature of a backwash from the stream of liquidation that took place in April.

Nerves have become calmer and investment buying again has entered the market, but any determined resumption of the advance in prices probably will not take place until it is clearer that the expected summer recession in business won't amount to much and that no fresh obstacles will be placed in the way of another upswing this autumn.

The obstacles that the markets fear are legislation providing for industrial regulation that will bring enough of a rise in costs as to wipe out profits, either by destroying the profit margin or by killing consumption with higher prices and an increase in taxes that also will make enterprise unprofitable. Probably not much more will be learned next month than already is known, but there will be a tendency for speculators to recover from their recent beatings.

New Financing Low.

On the financial side the month closes with a slight settling back of money rates, but with a dearth of new financing. Next week it is expected that the Treasury will announce its new borrowing plans, and official effort will be used to maintain an exceedingly cheap money market until that is over. At the end of another month, when heavy expenditures and disappointing tax receipts show the fiscal year closing with another enormous deficit, the worry over higher taxation scarcely will be allayed.

Steel and rail shares improved. Steel common set a pace by moving above par, but it was not impressive in the advanced position. Republic and Youngstown recovered. Chesapeake & Ohio led an upturn in the railroad division. Alleghany recovered a little, for anybody's reason. Metals were full although Smelters continued its smart advance. Chemical shares picked up.

In miscellaneous divisions A. O. Smith dipped nearly 4 points on a poor earnings report, the form of which, being confusing, perhaps adding to the uncertainty of proper price levels. B. M. T. preferred sold at its worst price in several years on a 3 point drop to yield nearly 8 per cent. Fertilizer shares were strong. Cuba Co. shares turned over in large blocks at new low prices.

Dwindling.

The weekly Federal Reserve statement discloses that the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, one of the two banks still using Government securities as collateral for that portion of its note circulation not covered by gold certificates or by eligible paper, has removed all of the $15,000,000 Government obligations so pledged. That leaves the Atlanta bank, which has $20,000,000 still pledged, the only Reserve bank having its notes not completely covered by gold certificates. The authority to use Government obligations in this manner was given originally for a limited time by the Glass-Steagall act, and extended by Presidential proclamation until March of this year, when a new act of Congress allowed the use of such paper as collateral for notes until June 30, 1939. After the last obligations have been removed as collateral the Federal Reserve Board may terminate such authorization. Gold certificates in the Reserve banks are on hand in an amount more than twice the amount of outstanding notes, but most of the gold is held to the credit of the New York bank, through which most of the imports have cleared. At one time nearly $1,000,000,000 of Government securities were pledged behind Federal Reserve notes.

Dividends.

Dividend meetings to be held the first week in June are of no great importance to the general investor. Homestake Mining and Mack Trucks head the list for Tuesday, which consists largely of stores, textiles and utilities. American Agricultural Chemical will come on Wednesday. Borg Warner will be held the following day. With a declaration of 40 cents a share, the same as that paid in last quarter, General Electric wound up this month of important dividend notices. Dividends currently are probably being cut closer to the pattern of earnings than was the case a year ago, so that the autumn adjustments to avoid the penalty tax on undistributed profits are unlikely to show as many or as large extra distributions as happened in 1936.

Inquiry.

Whatever may be the significance of it, the fact is that every stock which has been the subject of serious inquiry, with legal proceedings by the S. E. C., now shows a considerable recession from the price reached which incited the inquiry. Market advance of the stocks in each instance may have taken place without forbidden practices, but buyers nevertheless have taken the jolts of the downhill ride. Unfortunately, the S. E. C. inquiries always start after the case is more or less complete.

May Trading.

Small wonder commission brokers are selling their seats on the stock exchange at reduced prices, are reducing employes and generally acting as though they had never made and might never again make money, as usually happens in a short period of slackness. Turnover in stocks on the 24 trading days during May aprpoximated 18,500,000 shares, the smallest for any month since March, 1935, and the smallest May since 1924, when less than 15,000,000 changed hands.

Sales in April totaled 34,606,000 shares and the average for the first three months of the year was in excess of 50,000,000 a month. Sales exceeded 1,000,000 shares on only four days in May and the hourly average was 171,000 shares. The smallest day was today's session, with 550,000 shares, the fewest since April 3, 1935. Stock Firm Drops Small Accounts

New York, May 28 (AP).—Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., an international brokerage and investment house, announced today that it would restrict its stock commission business to cash for accounts with less than a $25,000 annual debit balance. Anticipating a cut in its commission business, it made arrangement for dismissal compensation for 35 to 40 employes. To cover handling costs, the firm will charge annual service fees against cash custodian accounts.

Trust Losses Vital Problem For Bankers

By Gerald G. Gross
A Staff Correspondent.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., May 26.—The losses at which the majority of trust departments are operating is the most important problem they are facing today, the D. C. Bankers Association was told today by W. T. Vandoren, vice president and cashier of the Liberty National Bank.

Quoting from a report showing that 90 per cent of the 300 corporate fiduciaries covered in a recent survey were operated unprofitably, Vandoren said the foremost reasons for this condition are decline of income from investments, rising overhead costs and, in some instances, inadequate fees.

"As a solution," he said, "I would suggest that each bank analyze its trust accounts, retain the profitable ones, and either put the others on a self-sustaining basis or dispose of them where possible. If trust departments are to endure, and I think they will, they must be placed on a basis which is sound and therefore permanent."

The speaker also cited the lack of public appreciation of the value of trust services, jurisdictional conflicts with the legal profession and the excessive number of trust departments as additional problems which must be faced.

"While it is true that more and more people are availing themselves of these services, it is also true that our vaults contain many safe deposit boxes literally filled with securities owned by individuals who have never seriously considered the creation of a living trust," he declared. "Little do these individuals realize that for a fee of several hundred dollars per year they could probably save thousands."

Vandoren questioned the wisdom of divorcing the trust business from the banking business, as advocated in some quarters, arguing that it would be difficult to raise sufficient capital for specialized trust corporations. banking and trust service have many of the same elements and that the two are so closely associated in the minds of the public that their divorce would be impractical. Speaking on financial statements from the viewpoint of the banker as prepared by the account, Alexander Wall, secretary of Robert Morris Associates, stressed the necessity of making such statements accurate and authentic.

Paul J. Seltzer, president of the Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, reported a membership increase of 22 during the year, bringing the enrollment to 546. Student enrollment in 13 classes rose to 455 during the same period.

Sports events continued today with the Hibbs and Norris Wright golf tournaments, the Gruver Cup horseshoe pitching competition and a ladies' putting contest.

Many Exchanges Closed for Week-end

New York, May 28 (AP).—Many of the country's important security and commodity markets will close tomorrow to give traders the advantage of a long Memorial Day weekend.

In New York the stock and curb exchanges and the cotton and commodity futures markets will suspend business, although coffee will be traded on the coffee and sugar exchange. Grains and provisions will be dealt in on the produce exchange.

The principal markets remaining open outside New York include Chicago Board of Trade, New Orleans Cotton Exchange, Boston Wool Market and Savannah and Jacksonville Naval Stores.

On Monday, Memorial Day, virtually all markets except in the South will suspend trading. Cotton will be dealt in at New Orleans and naval stores at Savannah and Jacksonville.

Socony Oil Plans New Financing

New York, May 28 (AP).—Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. expects to undertake new financing soon, John A. Brown, president, told shareholders at the annual meeting today. He pointed out the company had been spending substantial sums for capital improvements and said it was in the best interests of shareholders to continue the program.

Earnings for the first three months, Brown said, were estimated at about $12,900,000 against $7,160,000 for the comparable period last year. The gain in profits, he noted, was in common with the trend shown by most oilunits. He added, however, the industry was faced with rising operating costs.

Kennecott-Fisheries Negotiations Dropped

New York, May 28 (AP).—Negotiations between Kennecott Copper Corporation interests and Pacific American Fisheries, Inc., for the latter's purchase of Kennecott's Alaska Steamship Co. have been dropped.

Germany Cuts Rate On Foreign Debts

Berlin, May 28 (AP).—Germany cut the interest rates on certain private debts abroad to a maximum of 4 per cent today. An official decree placed that limit on interest payable to foreign creditors whose debts cannot be redeemed at majority because of Germany's restrictions on currency going out of the country.

It does not apply to those foreign creditors who have agreed to take their money in blocked accounts, or money which must remain in Germany in special accounts. Officials said many German debtors have been paying higher interest to foreigners than the latter could have obtained in their own countries.

Security Trading Shows Sharp Drop

New York, May 28 (AP).—The lassitude which has been shown in trading recently was emphasized today as the monthly sales total of the New York Stock Exchange showed bond dealings the smallest since November, 1932, and stocks since March, 1935.

Sale of stock in May were 18,562,374 shares, compared with 34,606,839 in April and 20,613,670 in May last year. In March, 1935, the total was 15,850,057. Bonds dealt in totaled $178,925,000, face value, this month against $294,866,000, last month and $200,410,000 in May, 1936. The November, 1932, total was $159,419,000.

Zephyr Train Nets $2.49 a Mile a Minute

Chicago, May 28 (AP).—The Milwaukee Road hailed its streamlined speed train, The Hiawatha, as a financial success today, reporting the flyer clipped off a net profit of $2.49 at every mile post—and it passes a post each minute.

An "earnings statement" isued for the train showed it had carried 550,000 paying passengers for a gross revenue exceeding $2,600,000. Gross earnings of the Hiawatha in 1936 were reported at $3.62 a train mile, and operating costs $1.13, leaving net earnings of $2.49.

Capital Transit Turns Deficit Into Profit

Net Income for 4 Months Gains $32,316 Over Last Year.

Net income from operations of the Capital Transit Co. for the first four months of 1937 after all charges showed a gain of $32,316, as compared with a loss of $50,815 for the comparable four months of 1936, according to the report of the company filed yesterday with the Public Utilities Commission.

When the item of earnings after bond interest, depreciation, taxes, etc., amounting to $32,316 is not impressive, it compares with a deficit for the same period last year.

This change from a deficit to a profit is noteworthy in view of the fact that it was accomplished in the face of substantial increases in the items of taxes and depreciation. These two items were $89,000 greater during the first four months of 1937 than they were during the corresponding four months of 1936. Also there was a wage increase amounting to approximately $17,000 a month which became effective April 1, 1937. The operating improvement, therefore, for the four months was $106,000.

Net earnings from operation, before interest on funded debt and provision for depreciation, showed a gain from $487,620 for the four-month period last year to $611,274 for the first four months this year.

C. & P Telephone.

Operating revenues of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., for April, 1937, were $951,428, according to the report of operations just filed with the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. Expenses, including taxes, and deducting net nonoperating income, amounted to $769,600, leaving a balance before dividend of $181,828, which compares with $200,716 in April, 1936.

Washington was served by 219,389 telephones on April 30, 1937, a net gain of 1,534 telephones over the previous month.

Washington Gas Light Company.

The monthly report of the Washington Gas Light Co. filed yesterday with the Public Utilities Commission shows operating revenues of $717,574 for April compared with $642,399 for the same month last year, an increase of $75,175 as a result of 15 per cent more gas sold. Operating expenses also increaed from $479,515 in April, 1936 to $502,664 in April this year, an increase of $23,149 due to the larger volume of gas produced and the greater number of customers served.

The net result of the month's operation after all deductions was a net income of $136,977, an increase of $51,221 despite increased charges of $13,616 for taxes and $1,601 for the retirement of property. This favorable showing in April brings the net income for the first four months of the current year up to $540,968.

On the Air Today

Three little stories have arrived proving that personalities of the studios are just like you and me and Mrs. McGillicuddy, down the street.

For example, Edward G. Robinson has just as many little unsuppressed desires as the next tough guy. Maybe more, because he doesn't lead the same casual life most of us do. Robinson has been a guest star two or three times recently in the Kate Smith "Bandwagon." On the first of these he rid himself of desire No. 1. He played a harp!

Ted Collins, Kate's manager, heard harp music where not called for at a rehearsal and found Robinson having the time of his life. No. 2 came a little later when the second Robinson show was ending. The actor suddenly edged Maestro Jack Miller off the stand and, seizing his baton, directed the orchestra in the closing moments.

"I've always wanted to do that," he admitted after the show was off the air. "I just couldn't resist it."

Then there's the story of Ben Grauer, N. B. C. announcer (you hear him on the "Magic Key") who went to Philadelphia this month to handle a Philadelphia Orchestra program. While there he met an old friend, Herbert Austin, whom he had not seen for a long time. Turning to others present, Grauer introduced "Mr. and Mrs. Austin."

The two acknowledged the introduction without batting an eye. But Grauer developed an extremely red face a little later when Austin, displaying a wedding ring in a little box, said "Ben, you're just a bit premature. It's to be announced next week!"

And finally, there's the story about Jay C. Flippin, vaudeville headliner for years, who stopped backstage to call on George Burns and Gracie Allen on their last visit to New York. Jay and George are great friends. A new stagehand refused to let Jay or anyone else see Burns and Allen. (Too many autograph hunters had slipped in on one slick story or another.)

"But I've simply got to see George," Jay insisted. "I've got business with him. Don't you know me? I'm Jay Flippen."

The man was unmoved. "I don't know who you are and I don't even care. You can't come backstage now."

Then it was that Flippen rose to the occasion. "Man, you can't do that to me," he cried with emotion. "I'm Gracie's missing brother!"

1,000 U. S. Tourists Stranded by Strike

Mexico City, May 28 (AP).—Nearly 1,000 tourists from the United States faced the prospect of an extended visit in Mexico tonight, for gasoline was not only hard to find but still harder to get.

The Mexican Automobile Association estimated that number, traveling in 200 to 250 cars, were beginning to feel the pinch of the oil strike called early today.

The association, the United States consul and the Mexican Tourist Bureau joined in trying to purchase enough fuel to take the Americans back up the 860-mile International Highway to the border.

Consul James B. Stewart asked tourists needing gasoline to register with him, saying "We are doing everything we can to get gasoline for them."

Many Treasury Guards To Go in Secret Service

By the Associated Press.

Officials reported yesterday they expect soon to complete arrangements for placing several hundred Treasury guards under the Secret Service.

They said the guard system at the Treasury and Bureau of Engraving buildings would be reorganized under the secret service to co-ordinate methods and improve efficiency.

Guards placed under the Secret Service will not be service agents, but may receive slight pay increases. In addition, some agents may be recruited from the guard force in the future.

Rep. Gearhart to Speak.

Frederick, Md., May 28 (AP).—Representative B. W. Gearhart, of Fresno, Calif., will be the speaker at Memorial Day exercises Sunday at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Relief Raiders Reject Offering Of 132 Millions

Blocs Ask $223,000,000 as Answer to Plan of Administration.

ance will be held this morning, with Beiter and Representative Joe Starnes, of Alabama, flood control advocates.

Alternative demands of the PWA flood control and road blocs will be submitted in memoranda form to Rayburn this morning by Beiter. They may in turn be shown to the President by Rayburn. Beiter, who insists he has enough votes to pass the original $505,000,000 in earmarkings, may withdraw his $223,000,000 compromise offer and fight it through on the relief bill if bloc terms are rejected.

The relief impasse was reached Thursday after a realignment of House members earmarked $300,000,000 of the $1,500,000,000 relief fund for PWA; $55,000,000 for flood relief and drought aid, and $150,000,000 for roads. The relief bill was shelved until Tuesday, pending interim efforts at a settlement.

Relief allotments, which, the Administration feels, already are adequate, were said to have been left entirely out of yesterday's initial overtures to the blocs, but the flood control demands were left open for adjustment.

Rayburn's Proposals.

Rayburn's PWA proposals to Beiter were said to provide:

1. Allocation of $52,264,000 of PWA funds to complete 597 local projects, on which local communities already have floated bonds and are awaiting Federal assistance. Money would be allotted on a 45 per cent grant basis.

2. Allotment of another $79,884,000 for 1,178 schoolhouses which are considered unsafe because of fire hazards.

3. Withdrawal of the Executive order virtually tying up PWA funds by providing for only 15 per cent Federal sharing of costs over and above strictly relief labor.

Beiter, who pointed out $372,412,000 is needed to complete some 2,987 approved PWA projects, declined to accept Administration terms.

His counter proposals, being drafted last night for formal submission to Rayburn today, would strike again at WPA funds by drawing on the estimated $223,000,000 Harry Hopkins will have unexpended on July 1.

Beiter proposes to divide this unexpended balance three ways, with three-fifths of it going to PWA and the remainder divided between highway and flood control projects.

Majority Leader Rayburn is attempting to work out an adjustment single-handed, but is expected to carry the dilemma to the White House over the week-end.

Bloc leaders are expected to insist that whatever compromise is agreed to be put in writing by the President, or actually written into the relief bill.

President May Appeal.

If compromise efforts fail, it was intimated leaders may try once again to defeat the earmarking amendments, backed by a direct appeal to Congress from the President.

President Roosevelt yesterday told reporters that the $505,000,000 earmarked by the House would give employment to only 100,000. If the money is expended through WPA, he said, 630,000 relief workers would receive the benefit, or 530,000 more jobs than provided under the earmarkings.

The President said Congress must differentiate between a relief bill and a public works bill. He forecast a satisfactory solution on at least part of the earmarking demands.

In addition to the 530,000 President Roosevelt indicated will be denied jobs, if the earmarkings go through, Hopkins has announced 500,000 must be dropped under terms of the original relief bill, curtailing relief rolls to 1,700,000.

Representative Wilburn Cartwright, of Oklahoma, head of the road bloc which apparently will not be reckoned with in the leadership conferences, was out of the city yesterday on a speaking trip.

Representative Starnes, flood-control earmarker, was called to the White House yesterday, but said afterward he conferred only with Secretary Marvin McIntyre on the proposed Roosevelt memorial hospital in LaGrange, Ala.

Seeks Flood Funds.

Starnes, at the Capitol relief conferences, is understood to be seeking a total of $95,000,000 for flood control this year. Of that amount $55,200,000 is provided in appropriations still pending, and $11,000,000 more has been promised by the President. Starnes contends that the Administration failed to provide any flood-control funds for 1937, although a six-year program of $572,000,000 was authorized under the 1936 Copeland and Overton acts. If a $95,000,000 total is provided this year, he points out that the program will still be one year behind.

Although the Administration is expected to make additional flood-control concessions, its spokesmen contend the $150,000,000 highway earmarking is without any justification. The usual Federal-State matching requirements are not included. Moreover, they point out that $165,000,000 is provided for roads this year in the Agriculture bill, and $214,000,000 is authorized for next year, with State officials empowered to make road contracts under it beginning July 1.

The base for his air attack on Valencia was believed to be the Island of Mallorca, almost due east.

Several Americans were endangered, but no American casualties were reported. Milton K. Wells, American consul, was caught in a rain of debris but escaped unhurt. Norman Thomas, United States Socialist, his wife, and a group of Americans were housed a few hundred feet from where three bombs fell. The American Embassy was untouched by explosions but the building in which it is housed was damaged.

As frantic rescue workers dug into the ruins more bodies were uncovered By noon, 76 of the dead had been identified.

He added he would urge the President to take a firmer stand against what he termed a German-Italian "war against Spanish women and children" and for greater American aid to the Spanish republic.

Several of the foreign diplomats in Valencia decided to move their residences from the city to the nearby countryside as a result of the insurgent air attacks.

The insurgent planes, sweeping in from the sea, first attacked the harbor, then flew over the center of the city and also bombed nearby villages.
